1024. ———.]—Testator bequeathed to his infant son a legacy of £6,000, contingently on his attaining twenty-one. He also bequeathed his residuary real & personal estate on trust till his said son should attain, or if living would have attained, fifteen, for the maintenance & education of all his children, & subject thereto for accumulation at compound interest; the aggregate fund to be in trust for all his children contingently on their attaining twenty-one:—Held: (1) the infant was entitled to maintenance during the interval between his attaining fifteen & twenty-one; (2) the ct. selecting that mode of giving maintenance which was most for the benefit of the infant, interest was declared to be payable on the £6,000 legacy.—*MARTIN v. 1025. Attainment of full age.]—The Earl of B. by his will gave all his estate to trustees, in trust for deft., N., & the heirs of his body, & to pay such sums out of the rents & profits for his maintenance, as Lord B. should, by any writing, appoint. By a codicil he directs the trustees, during N.'s minority, to pay the rents to pltf., so much as she pleases to be applied for his maintenance, & the residue to her own use; by another codicil directs the trustees shall not settle the estate on N., & the heirs of his body, till twenty-six, & till then such maintenance as the trustees & pltf. shall think fit. Mrs. S. insisted she was entitled to receive the rents & profits till N. attained the age of twenty-six, but the Master of the Rolls was of opinion they vested in N. at twenty-one, & the time of receiving prolonged only till twenty-six, & decreed the trustees should account for the rents, etc., from his age of twenty-one to twenty-six, to the committee of his estate, N. being found a lunatic.

It is insisted by Mrs. S. that she is entitled to the rents & profits of all the real estates devised under the will of the late Earl of B. till N.'s age of twenty-one, & that testator having by his third codicil, prolonged the time till his age of twenty-six, it will follow, as a natural consequence, that testator intended she should receive the rents & profits till that time (FORTESCUE, M.R.).—*SMITH v. 1028. ——— Duration expressly prescribed.]—Testatrix devised lands to trustees, in trust, in the first place, at their discretion, to pay an annuity to her son A., & next to apply the rents to the maintenance, education, & bringing up of the three children of A. during A.'s life; the sole survivor of the three children attained twenty-one in the lifetime of A.:—Held: the interest of such surviving child in the surplus rents & profits did not cease on his attaining twenty-one, but that he continued entitled to them during the life of his father.—*BADHAM v. 1029. ———.]—Testator made a certain provision for the infant son of his relation W., until the age of sixteen, & then left the infant to the care of his trustees to provide for him in some business or profession, & his future maintenance, out of testator's funded property:—Held: the infant, on attaining sixteen, was entitled to receive, out of testator's funded property, a sum sufficient to provide for him in some business or profession, & to an annual allowance for his future maintenance during his life; & it was referred to the master, to inquire & state what sums were proper to be allowed for those purposes.

Testator has imposed it, as a duty, on the trustees, to take care of the infant, & to provide for him in some business or profession, & his future maintenance; & the question is whether the ct., when it sees that testator has done so, & has pointed out the fund out of which the provision is to be made, does not take upon itself the exercise of the discretion which testator has reposed in the trustees (SHADWELL, V.-C.).—*KILVINGTON v. 1032. —.]—A party, whose interest in a fund had not vested was held under the terms of a power in a will, entitled to maintenance, even after attaining twenty-one.

Testator devised his freeholds to pay certain annuities, & accumulate the surplus rents so as to become part of his personal estate; & subject to the charges, to the use of the first & other sons of his son A. in tail, with remainder to his daughter B. for life, with remainder to her first & other sons in tail, etc.; & he directed that no person should, under the limitations, become entitled in possession while any antecedent limitation remained in contingency. He gave his personal estate to the children of A. & B., "except the eldest son," to be transferred to all his younger grandchildren, equally to be divided between them as & when the sons attained twenty-one, & the daughters attained that age or married, it being his will that each of their several shares & interests should become vested at that age, or the previous marriage of daughters, though such shares should not become payable or transmissible till after the demise of both his son & daughter; but, in the meantime, he empowered his trustees, though the parents of his grandchildren should be living, to apply the interest of each grandchild's "presumptive share, even including an eldest son's share, in their maintenance & education;" & the surplus was to accumulate & be payable along with their respective original shares when the same became vested & transmissible, & the payments were to be allowed to the trustees, though such grandchildren should not gain a vested interest. & testator declared, that after the death of A. & B., as well as during their lives, his trustees should in the meantime & until the share or shares of all his grandchildren of & in the trust funds should become vested & assignable, transferable, or payable, apply the dividends of the trust funds towards the maintenance & education of every such child & children respectively, including even the eldest. A. & B. were still living; A. had no children, but B. had an eldest son & other children: Held: (1) the eldest son of B. had not a vested interest in the personal estate; (2) the other children took vested interests, subject to be divested partially by the birth of other children; (3) all the children of B., including the eldest son, who had attained twenty-one, were entitled to have maintenance.—*ELLIS v. He appointed guardians during their respective "minorities" with a power to apply accumulations of the income of each child's share, during minority, in maintenance, education, etc.:—Held: the children were entitled, for maintenance, etc., to the income of their respective shares between the age of twenty-one & twenty-five.—*FRASER v. 1038. — During life-time of parent—Parent entitled to surplus.]—By a marriage settlement property was vested in trustees upon trust, after the death of the wife, to pay the rents & profits to the husband for life, or until he married again, & in case he married again & there was issue of the intended marriage, then to pay him one-half of the rents & profits, & out of the other half to levy & raise for the maintenance & education of one child one-fourth, of two or three children one-third, & of four or more children the whole income of such other half, & subject thereto to pay the whole income thereof to the husband for his life, & if there should be no issue, then to pay the whole of the rents & profits to the husband. The husband married again, & at the date of the decree there were four children of the first marriage, two daughters & one son, who had attained twenty-one, one son under age, & a child of a deceased daughter:—Held: (1) the trust for maintenance & education did not cease upon the children attaining twenty-one, but the four children were entitled equally to one-half of the rents & profits during the life of their father; (2) the daughters were equally entitled in the event of their marrying; (3) the word "issue" was restricted to the first generation, & therefore, the child of the deceased daughter took no interest.—FREWEN v. HAMILTON (1877), 47 L. J. Ch. 391.

1039. —.]—Testator gave the income of his estate to his wife & daughters for their respective lives, with a survivorship clause amongst them for their respective lives in case of the death of his wife or of any of his daughters, leaving no issue. In the event of a daughter dying & leaving issue, the trustees were empowered to apply all or any part of the "trust moneys or annual produce & premises" to which such daughter, if living, would be entitled, in the maintenance, education, & advancement of such her issue. After the death of his wife & all his daughters, the principal was to be divided amongst the issue then living of his daughters:—Held: the trustees had power to make allowances for the maintenance of deceased daughters' children after they had attained their majority.—HILL v. RAWLINSON (1866), 15 W. R. 148.

1040. —.]—Testator by his will gave to a woman an annuity of £100, & directed as follows:

"In the event of her death the annuity is to be continued to her children for their maintenance, & education, & I have to request" G. "to see it carried into execution." The woman survived testator & received the annuity up to her death, at which time all her six children had attained twenty-one:—Held: (1) the words "in the event of her death" could not be construed as only providing against a lapse of the annuity, & the annuity took effect in favour of the children; (2) the annuity was not confined to the minorities of the children, but was payable to them during their joint lives & to the survivors & survivor of them during their & his life, & children for the time being entitled as joint tenants.—*WILKINS v. Trustee was empowered to apply part for maintenance during minority of the children & for their advancement in life. Trustee sold a considerable part of the estate & invested proceeds on mtge. instead of 3 per cent. consols:—Held: trustee was liable to purchase so much 3 per cent. consols as might have been purchased at the fair market price with the sum advanced on the security, at the date of such security, & also to make good the amount of the accumulated fund which would have arisen, if the dividends had been from time to time duly invested; (2) certain sums which had been paid by the trustee for the maintenance of two daughters of testator's niece, after their marriage, but during minority, were proper, & ought to be allowed by the ct.; but the contrary was held as to the sums paid for maintenance by the trustee, after the daughters of the niece had attained their majority.

He also gave £100 to his wife, in addition to the house, etc., for the further support of herself & his daughter:—Held: the widow took absolutely, subject to a trust for the maintenance & support of the daughter, during minority, & which did not cease upon her marriage under age.—*CONOLLY v. N. Exclusion of Statutory Powers.

See, now, Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 31.

1056. Expression of contrary intention—What constitutes—Direction for accumulation of income until contingency.]—The fact that a will contains an express direction to accumulate, & no power of maintenance, will not be a ground for charging the trustee with sums properly paid for maintenance.

A legatee, on coming of age, signed a receipt for principal, & an acknowledgment & discharge for the dividends, as having been paid to her father for her maintenance. Six months afterwards she was paid her share of her father's estate, & executed a formal release to the trustee:—Held: she was concluded, & could not maintain a suit against the trustee for the dividends so paid to the father.

Pltf.'s case rests entirely on the direction to accumulate the dividends. Deft., M., in 1846 became the sole surviving trustee. . . . From that time the dividends, instead of being accumulated, were received by the father & applied by him for the maintenance of the children. If he was not of ability to maintain the children, the dividends were properly applied for their maintenance, notwithstanding the trust for accumulation. . . . (TURNER, L.J.).—AVALINE v. MELHUSH (1864), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 286; 10 L. T. 830; 10 Jur. N. S. 788; 12 W. R. 1020; 46 E. R. 386, L. J.J.

1058. ———.]—Testator by his will, after giving certain annuities to his daughters & a granddaughter, directed his trustees to accumulate the surplus income after providing for these annuities until the death of all his daughters, when the period of distribution was fixed; & after other provisions, the will contained a power of maintenance which was unlimited in duration of time, & expressed to be exercisable during the lifetime of the daughters. Superadded to the power of maintenance was another trust for accumulation of surplus income not applied in maintenance. Upon an application to the ct. by the trustees for directions whether the income of testator's estate was applicable for the maintenance & education of testator's grandchildren:—Held: (1) the power of maintenance was unlimited; (2) there was not sufficient evidence upon the face of the will of an intention to cut down the terms of the power of maintenance, which operated as well during the continuance as after the expiration of the trust for accumulation; (3) the grandchildren were therefore entitled to have the income of testator's estate applied towards their maintenance & education.—Re SMED, ARCHER v. PRALL (1886), 54 L. T. 929; 2 T. L. R. 535.

1059. ———.]—Gift of residue to include income.]—This will, as I have already pointed out, has given the income during the infancy of the legatee to the residuary legatee, & it has given it not by implication but by express words, because there is an express gift of the residue, & that residue includes the income of the legacy. Therefore the contention on the part of the infant is one as to which a contrary intention has been expressed by testator. It appears to me, therefore, that sub-sect. 3 [of Conveyancing & Law of Property Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43], furnishes a complete answer to this appeal (FRY, L.J.).—Re DICKSON, HILL v. 1060. ———.]—Direction to apply accumulations to maintenance.]—Testator, who died in 1909, directed his trustees to appropriate a share of his estate in favour of one of his daughters, & to hold the same & the accumulations, if any, of income made during her minority & coverture upon trust from the time she attained the age of twenty-one years or previously married, to pay the income to her during her life & after her death to hold the capital & income or so much thereof respectively as should not have been paid or applied under any trust or power affecting the same in trust for her issue as therein mentioned with a gift over in default of issue; & testator declared that if at his decease any child or grandchild entitled in expectancy for life or absolutely to a share or the income thereof under his will should be under the age of twenty-one years, or being a female should be unmarried, the trustees might apply the whole or any part of the income of such expectant share of such minor for or towards his or her maintenance, & should invest the residue, if any, of the said income & the resulting income thereof at compound interest, to the intent that such accumulations should be added to the principal share from which the same should have arisen & follow the destination thereof, with power for the trustees to resort to the accumulations of any preceding year & apply the same for or towards the maintenance of any person for the time being presumptively entitled thereto. The daughter attained the age of twenty-one years on Oct. 1, 1912, having previously married on June 12, 1912. The share consisted largely of property in Australia, the income of which did not reach the hands of the trustees in this country for many months after it had accrued due. The trustees had applied income for the maintenance of the daughter down to the date of her marriage, when they ceased to do so. On a summons raising the question whether the trustees had power to apply income accruing down to the date of her marriage for the maintenance of the daughter after that date:—Held: the maintenance clause in the will did not show a "contrary intention" so as to exclude sect. 43 of Conveyancing & Law of Property Act, 1881 (c. 41), & under that sect. the trustees had power to apply income accruing down to the date of the marriage for the maintenance of the daughter between the date of her marriage & the date of her attaining the age of twenty-one years, but not for any further period.—Re COOPER, COOPER v. COOPER, [1913] 1 Ch. 350; 82 L. J. Ch. 222; 108 L. T. 293; 57 Sol. Jo. 389.

1061. ——— Immediate life interest—Destination of accumulations.]—By a will which contained no maintenance or accumulation clauses applicable to residue, testator gave to his granddaughter A. an immediate vested life interest in a share of his residuary estate, with remainder to her children. At the time of testator's death in 1883, A. was an infant, & under the powers of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43, the trustees applied part of the income of her share for her maintenance & accumulated the remainder. A. married in 1887, & subsequently attained twenty-one, & there was issue of the marriage. It was contended on behalf of her infant child that the accumulations between the death of testator & the marriage of A. must, under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43 (2), be treated, not as income payable to A., but as capital to be invested for the benefit of herself for life, & afterwards for her children as the persons who ultimately became entitled to the property from which such accumulations arose:—Held: the gift of an immediate vested life interest to A. was an expression of a "contrary intention" within sub-sect. 3 of sect. 43, so as to exclude the operation of sub-sect. 2, & A. was absolutely entitled to the accumulations.—Re HUMPHREYS, HUMPHREYS v. LEVETT, [1893] 3 Ch. 1; 62 L. J. Ch. 498; 68 L. T. 729; 41 W. R. 519; 9 T. L. R. 417; 37 Sol. Jo. 439; 2 R. 436, C. A.

1062. ——— Direction against maintenance while living with father.]—Under a voluntary settlement an infant was entitled to a share of £10,000 stock after the death of his mother, a daughter of the settlor, & also to further parts of settled stock contingently on his attaining twenty-one. The trustees of the settlement were empowered by clause 6 at their discretion to apply any part of the income of the £10,000, not exceeding £500 a year, for the maintenance, education, & advancement or otherwise for the benefit of the infant, but by clause 9 no part of the income was to be applied for the maintenance, education or otherwise for the benefit of the infant whilst he should be "in the custody or control" of his father, or his father should "have anything to do with his education or bringing up." The father had no income beyond his captain's pay in the Army & did not wish to give up the custody or control of the infant & his education. Nothing was alleged against his fitness to have the custody of the child.

Upon an application by the infant to obtain an allowance for maintenance:—Held: the condition affecting the father of the infant was not repugnant to the interest given by the settlement or contrary to public policy, & the trustees had therefore no discretionary powers of maintenance which they could exercise in the infant's favour.—Re BORWICK'S SETTLEMENT, WOODMAN v. BORWICK, Re WOODMAN, [1916] 2 Ch. 304; 85 L. J. Ch. 732; 115 L. T. 183; 32 T. L. R. 583; 60 Sol. Jo. 567.

SECT. 2.—ADVANCEMENT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

See, generally, Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 32.

1063. Meaning of "advancement."]—(1) Testator directed his trustees to invest the proceeds of sale of his residuary estate, & to pay the income to his eight sons & daughters in equal shares. The will then contained the following clause: " & I give a power of advancement to my trustees." After the death of the survivor of the children, the corpus of the estate was directed to be paid to testator's grandchildren. The will contained a special power of advancement out of corpus in the case of grandchildren, & a clause of forfeiture in case of a child or other object of the trusts should attempt to anticipate his share:—Held: the trustees had no power to make advances out of corpus to the children.

In the absence of express words authorising the payment by way of advancement of part of the corpus of an estate to a person who, under the trust instrument, can never become absolutely entitled to a share of corpus, the ct. will not infer a power to the trustees to advance a sum out of corpus from the mere fact that the instrument contains a power of advancement simpliciter.

It [advancement] is a payment to persons who are presumably entitled to, & have a vested or contingent interest in, an estate or a legacy before the time fixed by the will for their obtaining the absolute interest in a portion or the whole of that to which they would be entitled (COTTON, L.J.).—*Re ALDRIDGE, ABRAM v. 1064. ——— Applicable to early life.]—A power in a will for trustees to apply a certain proportion of a fund settled for the separate use of a married woman, for life, with remainder for her advancement or benefit:—Held: under special circumstances, to authorise an advance to her husband, on his personal security, for the purpose of setting him up in trade.

The words of this power are very large; the trustees may apply any part not exceeding half the share at any period of the daughter's life for her advancement—that is a word appropriate to an early period of life—or otherwise for her benefit (MALINS, V.-C.).—Re KERSHAW'S TRUSTS (1868), L. He gave his residue upon trust for all his children equally, & declared that his trustees might raise & apply any part not exceeding one moiety of the expectant share of any child for his or her advancement, preferment, or benefit. The will contained no express provision for maintenance:—Held: (1) the clause providing for advancement, preferment, or benefit could not be regarded as a provision for maintenance; (2) Conveyancing & Law of Property Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43, must be taken as being incorporated in the will, but there was not, by reason thereof, any such provision for maintenance as to exclude the operation of the rule that legacies to infant children by parents or persons in loco parentis carry interest from the death of testator, & therefore, the legacies to the infant son & daughter respectively carried interest by way of maintenance from such date.—*Re MOODY, WOODROFFE v. Before she came of age, the father advanced money to the husband, for which he took his note; but which he charged in his ledger to the joint account of the husband & wife, & intended, if the same was not repaid, to set off the amount against his daughter's share of his estate:—Held: in a suit by the wife in the husband's lifetime for the administration of the estate, the exors. had a right to set off the advance against the wife's share.—TORRANCE v. CHEWETTI (1866), 12 Gr. 407.—CAN.

1081. —.]—Under a power contained in a will, to apply for A.'s advancement in life a portion of his reversionary share, B., the trustee, raised money by mtge. of the share, in order to pay A.'s apprentice premium to an apothecary. It was intended to apprentice A. to X., but it being discovered that X. was not a licenced apothecary, it was arranged by the solr. acting in the matter that A. should be nominally apprenticed to Y., a licenced apothecary, but actually serve his time with X.

The receipt for the whole amount was signed by Y.; but only half was paid, & that to X., the remaining half being handed over to A.'s father, who gave Y. his promissory note for the amount, but never discharged the obligation.

The purpose for which the money was raised having failed:—Held: B., although not shown to have been guilty of more than negligence, in following his solr.'s advice, was bound to bear the consequences of the mistake, & to replace the money borrowed on security of A.'s reversionary share.—*SIMPSON v. Payment to trustees of a post-nuptial settlement.]—A power in a marriage settlement to advance to a son of the marriage part of the trust funds for placing or establishing him in any business, profession, or employment, or otherwise for his advancement or preferment in the world:—Held: to authorise the payment of part of the trust fund to the trustees of a post-nuptial settlement made by a son in favour of himself & his wife & the issue of their marriage, neither the son nor his wife being entitled to any property producing an immediate income & the son being engaged in study, preparatory to entering the legal profession.

I cannot sanction the advance as the matter now stands: you are simply going to give the son a sum of money which he may put in his pocket; but I am disposed to think that, if he executed a settlement, I might then do it (ROMILLY, M.R.).—*ROPER-CURZON v. SUB-SECT. 3.—EXPRESS POWERS.

1084. Power for particular purpose—Impossibility of exercising power.]—By a deed of settlement a sum of money was settled upon trust for A. for life, & after death for B. for life, or until alienation, & afterwards in trust for B.'s children, & it was declared that the trustees might in their absolute discretion, but with the consent of the first tenant for life, if living, advance any sum not exceeding £2,000 for the promotion in the army of B. The purchase of commissions in the army having been abolished:—Held: inasmuch as the

which is taken in the name of his son, the presumption is, that the transaction is by way of advancement to the son. In such a case, there is no resulting trust in favour of the father.—KNOX v. TRAVER (1877), 24 Gr. 477.—CAN.

c. Question of fact.]—Where a mother makes a purchase in the name of her child, there is no presumption that an advance was intended. In such a case, it is a question of evidence whether there was an intention to advance.—MOORE v. MOORE (1895), 1 N. B. Eq. Rep. 204.—CAN.

d. Conveyance of land—Accepted by son as advancement.]—A son, in consideration of his father conveying to him certain land, accepted it as an

e. Children & mother interested in trust settlement—Advances to mother—Not advances to children.]—A testator by his trust-settlement directed his trustees to set apart & secure to each of his daughters in life & their children respectively in fee, the sum of £1,500, it being declared that whatever sums might have already been paid by him to any of his children, & vouched by receipt or other written document, should be accounted as so much of the provision falling to such child under his settlement. Several years before, testator had, on the occasion of the marriage of one of his daughters, conveyed to her a house, & received from her an acknowledgment, declaring that the conveyance was to be equivalent to £1,000 to account of her patrimony:—Held: according to the terms of the settlement, the fee of the provision of £1,500 must be taken to infer a distinct & several estate in the children of his daughter, as of their own right, independent of their mother, & therefore the advance of £1,000 made by testator to his daughter, was not to be deducted from their provision of £1,500.—*HUTCHESON v. 1086. Whether applicable to appointed as well as unappointed shares.—By a marriage settlement made in 1865 the income of the wife's fortune was settled upon trust, as to part thereof for the wife for life, & as to the other part thereof for the husband for life or until bkpcy. or alienation or his doing some act whereby the same or some part thereof would become vested in or payable to some other person. Subject to the trusts aforesaid the husband's & wife's fortunes were settled upon trust (in the events which happened) for their children in such shares " & with such provisions for their respective maintenance, education, & advancement " as the husband & wife should by deed jointly appoint, & in default of such appointment for the children equally at twenty-one or marriage. Then followed the usual advancement clause. In 1896, the husband & wife by deed appointed one equal ninth share of the trust funds to a son on his marriage & the appointed share was settled, & in 1897 they by deed appointed another equal ninth share to another son on his marriage & the appointed share was settled. Neither of these appointments contained an advancement clause. Subsequently the trustees of the 1865 settlement in exercise of their power of advancement raised £4,000 out of their trust funds in respect of each appointed share & paid the same to each of the son's marriage settlement trustees, & the husband & wife released their respective life interests in each of the sums so advanced:—Held: the appointments must be read into the original settlement & the advancement clause applied to appointed as well as to unappointed shares.—Re HODGSON, WESTON v. HODGSON, [1913] 1 Ch. 34; 82 L. J. Ch. 31; 107 L. T. 607; 57 Sol. Jo. 112.

1087. In whose favour exercisable—Persons next presumptively entitled.—A special power in favour of issue contained in a marriage settlement was exercised in favour of the infant pltf., the only child of the marriage, in manner following:—The income of the settled fund, after her father's death, to pltf. for life; after her death the capital to her children living on a day named or who should before such day attain twenty-one, or being female marry; but such trust for her children was not to take effect if pltf. was living & under fifty-two years of age on the day named, in which event she was to take the whole fund absolutely; the appointment, however, was not to take effect unless & until pltf. attained twenty-one.

There was a power of advancement in the usual form in the settlement to the extent of one half of " the expectant or presumptive or vested share " of any child, or " the appointed share " of any child or grandchild of the marriage. The appointment contained a power of advancement in respect of " the expectant or presumptive or vested share " of any child of pltf., but no provision for her advancement:—Held: reading the appointment into the settlement, the advancement clause in the settlement was only exercisable in favour of the persons who next under the provisions of the settlement were or would be entitled to an expectant, presumptive, or vested share of the corpus, & did not apply to a person who might become entitled to the corpus upon failure of the prior trusts; & the power of advancement in the settlement was not available for the purpose of providing funds out of capital for the benefit of pltf.—*Re WINCH'S SETTLEMENT, WINCH v. It was arranged that the duty should be paid by instalments, but the child, by reason of the increased cost of living, became unable to pay the last two instalments, & applied to the trustees, who were the widow & the Public Trustee, for assistance. They took out a summons asking the ct. if it was within the discretion of the trustees under the power of advancement to pay the duty out of corpus, & the ct. held that it was. The Public Trustee was willing to exercise the discretion in favour of the daughter, but the widow absolutely refused to assist her daughter because she had married without her approval:—Held: under the circumstances the widow had not exercised a discretion at all, but had in fact refused to exercise any discretion, & the ct. would direct the trustees to raise the duty out of corpus.—*Re KLUG, KLUG v. 1107. — Although powers of maintenance ceased.]—A person who was tenant for life under a will of a property producing a net income of about £140, died insolvent in 1853, leaving a daughter not a year old, who thereupon became entitled to the property, & a widow. The father was the son of a retired tradesman in a small way of business. In Nov. 1853, the widow being wholly without means of support, an order was made directing the whole income to be applied for the maintenance of the infant, & directing the two persons who were trustees of the will to pay it to the widow for that purpose. One of the trustees died in 1861. In 1863 the widow married a gentleman of good position but small means. No fresh application to the ct. was made, but the surviving trustee went on paying the whole income to the mother till 1873, when the daughter came of age. The daughter then filed her bill, alleging that after her mother's second marriage the payment of the whole income to her was improper, & asking to have an account of the past income, & to have the balance of it paid to herself after deducting a proper allowance for her maintenance & education. It was shown that pltf. had been well educated, & had lived as a lady, that her social position had been much improved by her mother's marriage, & that the income so far as not expended on herself personally, had been applied towards the expenses of the stepfather's establishment, of which she had the benefit:—Held: the order for maintenance ceased to be operative on the death of one of the trustees, but the allowance of the whole income for maintenance would, under the circumstances, have been sanctioned by the ct. if applied to on the death of the trustee, & again on the mother's marriage, & the whole income ought, therefore, now to be treated as having been properly applied. On appeal, the decision that the income ought to be treated as properly applied was affirmed, but the ct. was of opinion that the order for maintenance had come to an end only on the marriage of the mother, & not on the death of the trustee.—*BROWN v. 1118. Over testamentary guardian—Wider than that over parent.]—(1) In a case of an infant ward of ct. above sixteen, & therefore not falling under Custody of Infants Act, 1873 (c. 12), the ct. has no jurisdiction to interfere with the discretion of the father as to the custody, education, or conduct of his infant child, except in a case where the father is seeking to withdraw the ward from the jurisdiction of the ct., or where the father has been guilty of gross immorality so as to disqualify him from being the guardian of any child, or is influenced by wicked, causeless caprice which must be detrimental to the child's interest. Nor does the fact that the father has himself made his infant child a ward of ct., & asked the intervention of the ct., derogate from his parental authority.

(2) Upon an application for a habeas corpus, the question for the consideration of the ct. is, whether the person brought up on habeas corpus is under illegal custody without that person's consent. Where, therefore, a child, having attained the age of discretion, fourteen in the case of a boy, sixteen in that of a girl, has been removed from, or has left, the custody of the father, the ct. will not, upon an application by the father for a habeas corpus, order the child to be restored to him when the child denies the existence of any illegal constraint & consents to remain where it then is. But an infant under the age of discretion being incapable of consenting, any custody other than that of the father, or the guardian appointed by him, is treated as an illegal custody, & the infant as being under duress & imprisonment ; & on such an application by the father, that infant will be restored to his custody.

(3) The jurisdiction of the ct. over a testamentary guardian is wider & more readily exercised than over a father, the right of the former being a statutory trust in the discretionary exercise of which by him the ct. will interfere, when it will decline to review a father's discretion, the law recognising the natural rights of the father over his infant children because he has corresponding natural duties towards them.

A father having refused to allow his infant daughter, a ward of ct. over sixteen years of age, to spend a vacation with her mother while the lady in whose care he had placed her was abroad, or to see her mother more frequently than once a month, or to write to & receive letters from her mother without their being perused by him or some one appointed by him, the mother & daughter presented a petition headed in Custody of Infants Act, 1873 (c. 12), for the purpose of obtaining from the ct. the permission refused by the father :—Held : the child being over sixteen, & the case, therefore not falling within Custody of Infants Act, 1873 (c. 12), the ct. had no jurisdiction to interfere with the discretion, however unreasonable, of the father, the natural guardian of his infant child, in the absence of gross immorality or of wicked, causeless caprice on his part, & dismissed the petition with costs.

The father has the control over the person, education & conduct of his children until they are 21 years (BRETT, M.R.)—Re AGAR-ELLIS, AGAR-ELLIS v. LASCELLES (1883), 24 Ch. D. 317 ; 53 L. J. Ch. 10 ; 50 L. T. 161 ; 32 W. R. 1, C. A.

r. —.]—On the application of a husband against his wife for a writ of habeas corpus in respect of their three children, two of them being above twelve years of age, & therefore not being within the discretion as to custody given by a local statute framed on the principle of Talfourd's Act, it appeared that the wife had twice left him, taking her children with her, on account of his habitual drunkenness ; that on each occasion he agreed that she should maintain & educate the children apart from him ; that after the second separation he publicly & falsely alleged on oath against his wife charges so injurious that she could not be expected ever to live with him again ; that the wife had ample means, while the husband had only a narrow income :—Held : the cts. below exercised a right discretion in discharging the writ & remanding the children to the custody of their mother. The father's legal power was controlled as to the youngest child by a statute which gave absolute authority to the ct. ; it was materially affected as regards the other two by breach of marital duty, by consideration with respect to their welfare, & the objection to separating them from each other.—*SMART v. How altered by statute.]—The power of the Ct. of Ch. now vested in the Supreme Ct. of Ontario, to deal with the custody of infants, can be taken from that ct. only by an enactment couched in the clearest & most positive terms. The Ontario statute 8 Edw. VII. c. 59, respecting neglected children, falls far short of this & in fact recognises the jurisdiction of a judge of the Supreme Ct. to deal with the custody of an infant, notwithstanding that an order as to custody has already been made, under the statute, by a comr. for the trial of juvenile offenders.—Re MAHER (1913), 28 O. 1119. County court jurisdiction—On apportionment of compensation—For death of father.]—A workman was killed by accident, & the employers paid £300 into ct., with an admission of liability. There were two dependants, the widow & an infant child. The county ct. judge did not apportion the compensation between them, but made an order for certain payments to the widow. An agreement was then entered into between the widow & the child's grandfather, whereby the latter should maintain & have the control & custody of the child, & the widow should pay towards maintenance. The widow broke the agreement & obtained the custody of the child, thereupon the grandfather applied to the county ct. judge to vary the order of Sept., on the basis of the agreement. The county ct. judge made an order that the child should be in the custody of the grandfather:—Held: the county ct. judge had no power to deal with the custody of the child, but could only apportion the compensation between the two dependants.—FLEMING v. By the general policy of the Law of England the parental authority continues until the child attains the age of 21 years; but the same policy also requires that a minor shall be at liberty to contract an engagement to serve the state. When such an engagement is contracted it becomes inconsistent with the duty which he owes to the public that the parental authority should continue. brought up in a particular manner or taught a particular religion, & this right extends to testamentary guardians appointed by a father under 12 Car. 2, c. 24, s. 8. A person who has been duly appointed under 12 Car. 2, c. 24, s. 8, by the will of a father to be guardian of his child, stands in loco parentis, & having, therefore, a legal right to the custody of the infant, may, in order to obtain possession of such ward, claim a writ of habeas corpus, which a common law ct. has no discretion to refuse, if the appct. be a fit person & the child too young to choose for itself. Where, however, the validity of the testamentary appointment is disputed, the ct. will direct an issue to be tried by a jury in order to establish the same.

Notwithstanding the existence of an antenuptial agreement between husband & wife that the female issue of the marriage should be brought up in the religion of the wife & notwithstanding the fact that a female child has been for nine years brought up in such a religion, a ct. of common law has no discretion to refuse a writ of habeas corpus to compel the custody of the infant to be given to a person appointed guardian by the will of the father, with a direction to educate the child in a religion different from that of the mother.

If the infant be of an age to elect for itself, the ct. will merely interfere so far as to set it free from illegal restraint without handing it over to anybody. The right to such election . . . depends on age alone & not on mental capacity & it may be taken as settled that no such choice can be made, at all events by a female infant under the age of sixteen (ARCHIBALD, J.).—Re ANDREWS (1873), L. The mother being in poor circumstances obtained employment as a domestic servant, & placed the children under the care of the Protestant Orphan Society. In Oct. 1897, the mother was in the service of M., a farmer possessed of a substantial farm, & on Oct. 5, 1897, an agreement in writing was entered into between the mother & M., that M. should adopt H., & the mother agreed to give the child to M. & to have no claim on her. Shortly afterwards the mother was married again to a small farmer. There was no difference of religion between the parties. In the beginning of 1899 the mother demanded the child from M., who refused to give her back unless he was paid for her support & maintenance. On a motion for a writ of habeas corpus the judge saw & had a conversation with the child & was satisfied that she regarded with the strongest aversion the idea of returning to her mother, & held that having regard to the handing over of the child under the circumstances disposed to, the character of the mother's evidence, as given in her affidavits & the circumstances & present position of the child, the latter ought not, from the point of view of its own welfare, to be taken from the custody of M.:—Held: the mother had not deserted or abandoned her child within Custody of Children Act, 1891, s. 3, & she ought to be given into her mother's custody.—Re O'HARA, [1900] 2 L. After hearing so much about religious principles, it is proper for me to say that I cannot act upon those principles unless they be such as are contrary to the law of the land. The only view in which they are material is, that a father may permit his children to be brought up by other persons of a particular persuasion, so as to make it difficult for the ct. not to see that the happiness of the children must be affected, if interrupted in their course of education in those principles, & that their father would be the author of that suffering to them. . . . 1135. — By actual surrender.]—In exercising its jurisdiction over infants, the ct. will allow the interests of the child to prevail over the father's right of custody. Where, therefore, a father has actually surrendered the custody of his child to relatives, who have agreed to maintain & educate it at their own expense, & the ct. recognises that to allow the father to revoke that arrangement & to insist upon having the child returned to him would be injurious to the best interests of the child, the ct. is not under any obligation to make an order for the return of the child.

Pltf., the father of a female infant about ten years of age, brought an action against his half-brother & wife claiming a mandamus against them requiring the restoration of the custody of his child. The child came into the custody of defts. in the following circumstances. Defts. were childless. Pltf.'s child in question was one of seven living brothers & sisters. The family lived in a crowded district, & the child had been weakly & unhealthy during her infancy. When she was just under two years old she was taken by pltf. to defts.' house, which was situated in a healthy neighbourhood. She continued to live with defts. until she was brought back to her parents, with whom she stayed six weeks. In Aug. 1911, it was arranged between pltf. & defts., the latter having come to see the former with that express object, that the child should again be taken by defts. to live with them, to be brought up & adopted by them as their own child. Medical evidence was adduced to show the benefit that the child derived from her residence in defts.' home:—Held: the facts of the case showed that it would be detrimental to the best interests of the child that she should be removed from the care & custody of the relatives with whom the parents had placed her; & therefore no order ought to be made disturbing the present position in any way.—Re MATHIESON (1918), 87 L. 1156. —.]—The jurisdiction of the ct. in these cases does not depend upon property. The ct. has to consider what is for the benefit of the infant in a case in which no suggestion is made against the character of the father. . . . It is very much better for this boy in this position of life that he should be with his father in Manitoba, learning from him the business which he is able to teach. . . . I have no hesitation in saying that the father's choice is the better choice, & that the proposed interference with the rights of the father is one which the ct. ought to discountenance. . . . The order will be that the father will be at liberty

PART XI. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 1.

1151 i. Outweighs father's rights.]—The father of a child five months old, her mother being dead, gave her into the custody of her maternal grandparents, & left her in their custody until she was nine, & by certain acts the father in the opinion of the majority of the ct. indicated his intention to abandon his right to her custody in favour of the grandparents, but had not otherwise disentitled himself to his natural right of the custody of the child. The father having married again shortly after his first wife's death, had by his second wife four other children. The grandparents were desirable guardians, & the child was happy with them:—Held: in the circumstances, it would be injurious to the child's welfare to make such a change of custody, & therefore, the ct. should refuse to make an order for her to be handed over to her father.—GOLDSMITH v. SANDS (1907), 4 C. L. R. 1648.—AUS.

1151 ii. —.]—The question who should have the custody of a child, the dominant matter is the welfare of the child. A husband & wife had lived apart for over a year, & the only child of the marriage, a girl of three years of age, had always lived with her mother. There was no evidence to show that the mother was not a fit person to have the custody of the child. On a writ of habeas corpus issued by the father to obtain from his wife the custody of the child:—Held: it was for the child's welfare that she remain with her mother.—MOULE v. MOULE (1911), 13 C. L. R. 267.—AUS.

1151 iii. —.]—The Ct. of Ch. has not heretofore interfered, & cts. of common law will not interfere to deprive the father of his exclusive common law right to the custody of the children, except in cases where it is essential to their welfare & well-being, either physically, intellectually, or morally, that they should so interfere.—Re CARSWELL (1875), 6 P. R. 240.—CAN.

1151 iv. —.]—Upon an application by the father of two infants under the ages of five & three respectively, for a habeas corpus to obtain their custody from the mother, it appeared that appot. was a man of drunken habits & of evil conversation, that he had beaten his wife & so ill-treated her that she was justified in leaving him, while she was a moral & sober woman. It was also shown that the maternal grandmother of the infants was able & willing to give them a home with their mother, who lived with her, while the paternal grandmother was neither able nor willing to do so:—Held: having regard to the welfare of the infants & the conduct of the parents, the mother should have the custody for the present.—Re DICKSON (1888), 12 P. 1151 x. —.]—The ct. dismissed the application of a father to obtain the custody of a five-year-old child which since shortly after its birth had lived with its maternal grandparents, & was infected with tuberculosis, from which its mother had died a year after its birth, & was extremely nervous & likely to suffer from a present change of care, although another physician, who examined the child during the trial, testified that he found it quite healthy, & although the father had remarried a year after the death of his wife to a young widow who had had no children of her own, but stated that she had taken care of those of relatives, & his house, although not as large as that in which the grandparents & their four grown children lived, was, in the opinion of the ct., sufficient for the proper bringing up of a child.—Re EMMONS, [1922] 2 W. W. R. 249; 67 D. L. R. 218.—CAN.

1151 xi. —.]—Where a child was settled in a comfortable & happy home, & the only home offered by the father was one that was likely to prove of a temporary nature, & the ct. was of opinion that it would be hazardous to the child's welfare to remove her, an application by the father for the custody of the child was refused.—Re WHITFIELD, [1922] 3 W. W. R. 894; 70 D. L. R. 658.—CAN.

1151 xii. —.]—Generally speaking it is to the advantage of the child to be brought up, directed & disciplined by its parent or parents. 1151 xix. —.]—The common law rights of a father to the custody & control of his children have been encroached upon by statute, & the ct. may now, under Infants Act, 1908, grant the custody of the children to the mother. Where a father asks for a writ of habeas corpus to take a child out of the custody of its mother, the ct. is not confined to granting or refusing the writ, but can give effect to Infants Act, 1908, although no application under sect. 6 has been made by the mother. In considering the question of custody & access under sect. 6, the ct. has to have regard, first, to the welfare of the infant; secondly, to the conduct of the parents; & thirdly, to the wishes as well of the mother as of the father. The rights of the father are not to override the wishes of the mother.—Re THOMSON (1911), 30 N. Z. L. R. 168.—N.Z.

1154 i. Essential for safety & welfare.]—The ct. must be satisfied not merely that it is better for the child, but essential to its safety or welfare in some very serious & important respect, before it will interfere with the father's rights.—Re HATFIELD (AN INFANT) (1895), 1 N. B. Eq. Rep. 142.—CAN.

1154 iii. —.]—The ct. will not grant a writ of habeas corpus to a parent for the restitution of his child unless they are satisfied such parent is a fit person, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, & especially to the interests of the child, to have the control of the child.—Re SKRFFINGTON (1908), 43 I. L. T. 245.—IR.

b. Welfare.]—There was a contest in the surrogate ct. between the stepfather & uncle for the guardianship of a child of ten or eleven years old; the child preferred her stepfather, & the surrogate ct. appointed him guardian; but the Ct. of Ch. on appeal, being satisfied that it was for the real interest of the child that the uncle should be guardian, reversed the order below.—Re IRWIN (AN INFANT) (1869), 16 Gr. 461.—CAN.

c. —.]—The mother of a child six years of age, whose father was dead, having remarried, delivered up the child to a cousin for nurture & adoption. No written agreement was made, & the parties differed as to the oral understanding:—Held: the ct. looking only to the best interests of the child, should refuse to direct its redelivery to the mother.—Re SCOTT (1879), 8 P. R. 58.—CAN.

d. —.]—The provision of R. S. O. 1897, c. 168, s. 1, with regard to the custody of infants, recognises the maternal as well as the paternal right, & requires equal regard to be paid to the wishes of the mother as to those of the father; & thus, where the wishes of the mother are opposed to those of the father, the principal matter to be considered is the welfare

The wide discretion in such cases given to the ct. is now invariably exercised in the children's interests. Where the parents of the children were living apart & the judge at chambers decided in the interests of the children that it would be best to leave them in the custody of the guardian appointed by the father, the ct. declined to interfere, no case justifying such interference having been made out. if the ct. see no ground to impute any motive to the father injurious to the health or liberty of such a child, as by sending it out of the Kingdom; the father being at the time an alien enemy domiciled in this Kingdom & the mother being an Englishwoman, & apprehensive only that he meant to send the child abroad, but assigning no sufficient reason for such her apprehension.—*R. v. 1160. General bad character.]—(1) Before the jurisdiction of the ct. to deprive a father of the guardianship of his children can be called into action, the ct. must be satisfied that the father has so conducted himself, or placed himself in such a position, as to render it not merely better for the children, but essential to their safety or welfare, that the father's rights should be interfered with, except in the cases within 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54. Although the circumstance of the children being in the custody of the mother excludes the operation of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, the provisions of that Act are interfering with her in any way during that time. On an application by the father for a habeas corpus to obtain the possession of the child:—Held: he had a legal right to assume the custody of her, there being no imputation against her father's character, or that she would not be properly cared for in his house.—Re CORAM (1886), 25 N. c. —.]—The ct. refused to give the custody of children to their mother, who was able to provide for their moral & physical welfare, when she left her husband, without a valid reason & refused to return, & he was equally able to provide for them. The father has the legal right to the custody of his children, & the ct. will not deprive him of that right when he is guilty of no wrong, & is able to support them, even though it thinks that living with the father apart from the mother may be less beneficial to the infants than living with their mother, apart from the father.—*ST. d. —.]—The father, if a proper person, cannot be deprived of his legal right to the custody of his legitimate children of whatever age. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 39, which gives a discretionary power to a judge in England, has not been extended to this country; therefore the law applicable to cases which occurred in England previous to the passing of that statute is applicable here.—Re HOLMES (1862), 1 Hyde, 99.—IND.

Conduct showing the father to be a person to whose guardianship it would be very objectionable to intrust children:—Held: sufficient ground for depriving him of their custody, & for providing otherwise for their care, maintenance & education, where such a provision can, by an actual appropriation of property or otherwise, be effectually secured.

(2) But where the only security proposed was a deed of covenant of the infants' grandmother to provide for the maintenance & education of the children for her life:—Held: such conduct was not sufficient to enable the ct. to interfere.—Re FYNNE (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 457; 12 L. Occasional acts.]—The ct., out of respect to the privacy of families, will not interfere to deprive a parent of the custody of his children whenever, in the usual course of treatment & discipline, he does something that may to a third party appear an act of cruelty; therefore, notwithstanding there may have been certain improprieties, & occasionally violent outbreaks exhibited on the part of a father towards his children, the ct. will not take from him the custody of their persons, which is given him by the common law & the law of nature, especially where the alleged grievance has been suffered to exist for a considerable time without any application for the judicial interference of the ct. This does not, however, prevent the ct., in cases of excessive cruelty, from interposing its authority on behalf of children, by removing them from the father's custody & control.—*BLAKE v. age, the fact of one act of violence by the husband having been sworn to, & not denied, & there being no imputation on the character of the wife, the ct. ordered the youngest child, a girl of very tender age, to be delivered up to the wife, but refused to make a similar order as to the youngest boy, & made an order, with special directions as to the access of the mother to the children remaining with the husband, & for access of the husband to the youngest child.

I am of opinion that the wife ought to have custody of the youngest daughter until the age of seven years, or further order, & access, under proper regulations, to the other children, the mother undertaking for the proper care, maintenance, & education of the child; & that she shall not be removed without the leave of the ct. Where, upon an application by a wife who had obtained a sentence of divorce against her husband for the custody of her children, the conduct of her husband appeared to be such as clearly to render it improper that he should have the custody of the eldest child, a girl of eleven years old, the ct. made an order for the delivery of all the children, two of whom were under seven years of age, to the mother, holding it unnecessary to consider whether it would have made the same order with respect to the second child, who was a boy of nine years old, if his case had stood alone, as the effect of the children being brought up in different custodies would be likely to create factions in the family.—*WARDE v. A motion was made by the mother of a female infant, eight years of age, for the exclusive control of the education, religious & otherwise, of the infant, & that the father's access might be limited to thirteen weeks of the year during the child's holidays. Other things, such as the parents' conduct, being equal, when it happens that the parents' wishes conflict, the ct. must determine which is to have the custody,

It was admitted that if handed over to her the three infants, aged fifteen, seven, & four years, would be educated as Catholics. C.'s means consisted

In "having regard to . . . the conduct of the parents & the wishes as well as of the mother as of the father," the ct. will not treat the parents in an unequal manner or differently the one from the other, but will take the whole conduct & wishes of both parents into

Later in 1917, the child's mother, the father's widow, applied for an order for the custody of the child. The father was a Protestant, the mother a Roman Catholic. The child had been baptized in a Roman Catholic Church, so far as appeared, without objection from her father, but was being brought up as a Protestant by her aunt, without objection on the part of the mother, so far as appeared, until the application was made. There was evidence that the mother was addicted to the excessive use of intoxicants, & evidence in denial of that. The infant was the eldest of four children, & the other three were in the custody of the mother. The aunt had a comfortable home; while the mother had no house of her own & went out to work by the day, but had near relations who were able to help her to bring up & support the children:—Held: the mother was not a suitable person to have the custody of the child, & it was not in the child's interest to take her away from the care & custody of her aunt.—Re TAGGART (1917), 41 O. The ct. ordered substituted service of the petition, but, at the hearing, declined to make the order, although the father had filed affidavits & appeared by counsel, because the father & infants were resident abroad, & because a suit by the mother for restitution of conjugal rights was pending, which, if successful, would have the same effect as the order prayed.—Re TAYLOR (1840), 11 Sim. 178; 9 L. He subsequently sued for a divorce, alleging adultery by her on two distinct occasions. e. Visits to school.]—A father having secreted two of his children, aged respectively eight & eleven years, from their mother to prevent their being brought up in the Roman Catholic religion, to which she belonged, upon the petition of the mother, praying for the custody of the children, the ct. ordered that the husband should disclose the whereabouts of the performance of his military duties, having previously placed the child under the charge of his sister, refusing to allow access by the mother to it, on the ground that this was best for the child. His conduct had throughout been very indulgent to his wife, & free from blame. The views of the mother as to the training of the child were antagonistic to those of the sister, who was also determined, as the mother alleged, that it should grow up a total stranger to her. A petition for access to the child having been presented by the mother under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54:—Held: the ct. would not in the circumstances, interfere with the father's arrangements for the training of the child, & the petition was dismissed.

Both father & mother gave an undertaking not to remove the child out of the jurisdiction. The father, on one of the days on which he had access to the child, took her away & removed her out of the jurisdiction. The mother applied for & obtained a rule for habeas corpus & a rule nisi for attachment against the father, but as he had left the country personal service upon him of the orders was impossible:—Held: the rule for attachment should be made absolute, & a writ of sequestration should also issue notwithstanding the absence of personal service upon the father.—*R. v. her husband, petitioned for the custody of her children under the age of twelve. A deed of separation was also filed executed between them in 1852, which gave her the sole control of her children, then or thereafter to be born. An ex p. order was made upon the ground stated in the petition, verified by affidavits for the delivery of the children to petitioner, which order upon a subsequent application the judge refused to rescind. Numerous affidavits were filed on both sides. A writ of attachment for contempt in not obeying the original order was by order of the judge issued from the Ct. of Q. B., & the husband moved against it for irregularity. It was objected that while in contempt by not having surrendered himself under it, he could not be heard:—Held: he might nevertheless defend himself by objections to the process if irregular; an appeal would lie to the ct. from the judge's order; admitting the right to make an ex p. order in case of necessity no sufficient ground was shown for it here; the facts had not been properly stated in the first application, the real reason for applt. leaving her husband's house & the arrangement then made between them having been withheld; the subsequent hearing of both sides upon the merits, did not preclude him from taking advantage of these objections against the original order, which was therefore set aside.—*Re ALLEN, R. v. r. Dispute as to right to custody.]—An infant duly committed to the care of the Children's Aid Society of Vancouver under Children's Protection Act of British Columbia was by such society placed with P. as a foster parent. Subsequently another society, upon notice to the Children's Aid Society of Vancouver, but without notice to P., applied to the magistrate who made the order originally, & obtained an order for the surrender of the child, on the ground that it was of a different religion from the society with which it was first placed. Upon such application the fact was ascertained that the child had been placed in a foster home, but its whereabouts was not disclosed by the officer appearing for the society. Later the second society, on obtaining this information, procured an order for & served a writ of habeas corpus on P., directing him to produce the child. He appeared & moved to set aside the writ & the order: Held: although the first society was the legal guardian of the child when the second order was made, yet P. could not be deprived of his legal rights without notice & without an opportunity of being heard; the contract placing the child with P. divested the society of any authority to interfere with his rights unless the child's welfare demanded that it should be withdrawn from his care.—Re PILKINGTON (1910), 15 B. The return stated that they were all under twelve, the age mentioned in R. S. O. 1877, c. 130, s. 1:—Held: upon demurrer, the return must be considered in the light, not only of the common law, but of the statutory provisions with regard to the custody of infants, & the return was sufficient in law.—Re SMART, INFANTS (1886), 11 P. In this matter it was directed that the evidence should be taken vidæ voce, & it was further ordered that a foreign commission should issue to take evidence abroad, & that the parties to the application should be at liberty to examine each other for discovery before the hearing.—Re SMART, INFANTS (1887), 12 P. 1243. —.—The mother of a child, between ten & eleven years of age, although a Roman Catholic, had consented to the child being placed in a Protestant school for destitute children. Being ill from consumption in a workhouse infirmary, she became, as she alleged, anxious that the child should be removed & placed in a home for poor children, so that she might be brought up in the mother's own faith & in that in which the child had been baptised. She had, before being in the infirmary, lived in lodging houses, had neglected the child & had lived a drunken & immoral life. The mother, who, it was alleged, had lately become a member of the Church of Rome, desired to have the infant restored to her, & a gentleman of wealth was prepared to provide for its maintenance, education, & advancement:—Held: the manager of the home had acquired no right of any kind over the child, & it must be given up to the mother.—*R. v. The young lady went to his house to spend an evening at Christmas, when the guardians sent two police officers to bring her away. The tavern keeper refused to let her go, & brought an action of trespass against the officers. They pleaded the general issue, & a verdict was given for £20:—Held: the damages were excessive, & if the facts had been pleaded in justification, they thought that there would have been an answer to the action.—*FLEMING v. 1248. —.—There is no general rule that a father who makes a settlement on his infant child has a right to have an order made for the delivery of the child to him.

A young woman, of the age of eighteen, the daughter of Jewish parents, & brought up in that faith, was induced by some persons of the Christian religion to leave her father's house. She embraced that religion & was baptised. She afterwards went to live with K., a widow lady, who was a Christian, & continued to reside there, being maintained by her. The father brought an action at law against the persons who had induced the girl to leave her home, & obtained a verdict with £50 damages. Soon afterwards he settled £100 on the infant, & this sum was paid to ct. A summons was then taken out in chambers in the name of the infant, by her brother as her next friend, asking that he might be appointed her guardian. This application was sanctioned by the father. A cross-summons was taken out in the name of the infant by K., as her next friend, asking that she might be appointed guardian of the infant. K. did not propose to make any permanent provision for the infant, but stated her readiness to maintain her during her minority. There was some evidence to show that the father had attempted to regain possession of the infant, by force. The Vice-Chancellor saw the infant, & was told by her that she had been baptised into the Christian faith, & that she wished to continue in it. It appeared also that she was of a nervous temperament, & was in great dread of returning to her father's house. The Vice-Chancellor, under these circumstances, would not make any order for the appointment of a guardian to the infant, but upon an undertaking being given by K. to produce the infant upon the hearing of an application which might be made for a writ of habeas corpus, restrained the father from attempting to obtain possession of the infant otherwise than by legal process.—Re LYONS (1869), 22 L. 1257. —. —. —.].—An ante-nuptial agreement that the children shall be brought up in a different religion from that of the father is not binding at law or in equity; but such an agreement will have weight with the ct. in considering whether the father has abandoned his right to educate his children in his own religion. Where a father has not forfeited or abandoned his right to educate his children in his own religion, the ct. cannot refuse to order a child to be educated in that religion merely because it thinks that the child will be more happy & contented, or better provided for, if left with those who have the care of it. But, if a father has forfeited or abandoned his right to educate his children in his own religion, the ct. will consider only the happiness & benefit of the child, & will order it to remain in the care of those by whom it has been brought up, & to be educated in their religion; although the child may not have so far imbibed the particular doctrines of that religion as to render it dangerous to change its religious training. The father of infant pltf. was a Roman Catholic & the mother a Protestant. Before the marriage they made a verbal agreement that the boys should be brought up as Roman Catholics & the girls as Protestants. Pltf., who was a girl, was baptised in the Church of England. At the time of her birth her father was absent, ill of consumption, but was informed by letter of the mother's intention as to the baptism. He replied, saying that a Roman Catholic priest would call on the mother. This was not done, & the child was baptised as a Protestant. The father died in Feb. 1863, when the child was nine months old, leaving no property for the support of his children. A few days before his death he made a will whereby he directed that his children should be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith, & appointed his brother, who was a Roman Catholic, their guardian. After his death pltf. was allowed by the guardian to remain with her mother & her mother's family, & to be brought up by them as a Protestant till she was nearly nine years old. The guardian then claimed that the child should be given up to him, & after long discussions applied for a writ of habeas corpus in the ct. of Q. B. The child was then made a ward of the Ct. of Chancery, being then nearly eleven years old, & the Lords Justices, having seen & conversed with her, were of opinion that she had not imbibed the distinctive principles of the Church of England to such an extent that it would be cruel or dangerous on that ground alone to have her educated in the Roman Catholic faith:—Held: notwithstanding, pltf. ought to be allowed to remain with her mother, & to be brought up in the Protestant religion.—*ANDREWS v. 1258. ——— Injunction.]—A Protestant on his marriage with a Roman Catholic lady promised that the children of the marriage should all be brought up as Roman Catholics. Soon after the birth of the first child he determined that they should be brought up as Protestants, to which determination he adhered. At the time of the proceedings there were three children, girls, aged respectively nine, eleven, & twelve. The mother, unknown to the father, & in spite of his express directions, had so indoctrinated them with Roman Catholic views that ultimately they refused to go with their father to a Protestant place of worship. The father thereupon commenced an action in their names by himself as next friend, he being a co-pltf., to have them made wards of ct., & took out a summons in the action for directions as to their education. The wife then presented a petition in the matter of the infants, & of Custody of Infants Act, 1873 (c. 12), with a view to their being brought up as Roman Catholics. The judge dismissed the petition, & made an order on the summons declaring that the children ought to be brought up as members of the Church of England, & ought not to be taken to Roman Catholic places of worship, & restraining the mother from taking them to confession or to Roman Catholic places of worship without the consent of the father:—Held: (1) the father had not forfeited his right to have the children brought up according to his own religious views, & the ct. would aid him in enforcing that right, & the injunction had been rightly granted; (2) the declaration ought to be omitted, leaving it to the father to do what he considered to be best for the temporal & spiritual welfare of the children.

(3) Where religious principles have been instilled into the minds of children of tender years, contrary to the wishes of the father, the ct. will not privately examine the children to see the extent of the impression which has been created upon their minds.

1260. ——— Welfare of child.]—

Before the marriage of a Protestant with a Roman Catholic wife, the husband & wife signed an undertaking that all the children of the marriage should be brought up Roman Catholics. There was only one child of the marriage, a girl, who with the father's consent was baptised as a Roman Catholic. When the child was about three years old, the father, who was in destitution, died at the house of M., a Protestant cousin of the wife, who was in good circumstances & had been kind to the family. The father, on his death-bed had commended his wife & child to her, & appointed no guardian. Soon after his death, the child, with the consent of her mother, who was statutory guardian, went to live with & was maintained by M., with whom she remained till she was seven years old, & there was a strong attachment between them. The mother then died, without appointing a guardian. After her death, her brother, who was a Roman Catholic, insisted that the child should be brought up a Roman Catholic, took her away from M. by force, & sent her to America, whence she was brought back under habeas corpus proceedings instituted by N., a Protestant brother of the father. Nothing had been said to M. by either father or mother as to the religious education of the child:—

Held: (1) as the child had no parent or guardian the ct. had only to consider what was for her welfare, having due regard to the wishes of the father as to religious education; (2) the ante-nuptial agreement was not binding on the father, & though he acted during his life on the view that the child was to be brought up as a Roman Catholic, he was at liberty to change his mind, & it could not be inferred that in the events which had happened he would have wished the child to be taken from M., in order that she might be brought up as a Roman Catholic, a course which, in the opinion of the Ct., would not be for her benefit.—Re NEVIN (AN INFANT), [1891] 2 Ch. 299; 60 L. Accordingly, although under that Act a mother who survives the father of her children is now by law their guardian, either alone, when no guardian has been appointed by the father, or jointly with any guardian appointed by him, she has no greater powers as regards the religious education of the children than those which any guardian, appointed by will or otherwise, had at the passing of that Act; & unless under very special circumstances, she is bound to see that the children are brought up in the religious faith of the father, whatever ported to direct that the infants should be placed in a good & approved family home & brought up in the tenets of the Protestant faith. B. was a Roman Catholic, as had been his wife then deceased; but he was in poor circumstances, & was led to believe that he could not obtain the services of the society unless he agreed that the children should be brought up Protestants. An order of commitment followed & it also contained the Protestant clause. The society placed the children in Protestant homes. Shortly before his death he professed some doubts, but died without any public renunciation of the doctrines of that church. By his will he appointed his widow & a clergyman guardians of his children. But its power is in such case limited to the removal of the guardian & the appointment of another who is willing to act; no directions as to education can be given when the ct. has no fund under its control out of which the education can be provided.

A Roman Catholic died leaving a widow & infant children. The widow, acting under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (c. 27), appointed S. guardian of the infants, who had them educated as Protestants. The father had left no directions as to the religious education of the infants, & was proved to have been indifferent on the subject. An elder son had in the lifetime & with the consent of the father been brought up as a Protestant; & the eldest of the infants, being of an age to judge for herself, preferred to remain a Protestant. The infants were not wards of ct., & had no property.—Held: there were special circumstances taking the case out of the general rule that infants are to be brought up in their father's religion; & the ct., being of opinion on the facts that it would not be for the children's welfare to interfere, refused to remove S. from the guardianship, or to appoint another guardian to act jointly with her.

In the present case it appeared that the father was indifferent to religion & that there were practically no wishes of his to rely on & the ct. was not bound to play battledore & shuttlecock, contrary to its own inferences from the facts of the case, with the religious education of the children, so as to interfere with the present guardian (LINDLEY, L.J.).—Re McGRATH (INFANTS), [1893] 1 Ch. 143; 62 L. 1284. Abandonment of rights—What constitutes—Neglect of religious education.]—The ct. will attend to the express wishes of the father, as contained in his will, with regard to the religious education of his children, unless from neglect or otherwise, during the life of the father, the children have been allowed to grow up in a different faith, & great danger would arise to the moral & religious welfare of the children, if the ct. complied with the direction contained in the father's will.

There have been cases in which the guardians, in neglect of their duty, have brought up the child in a system of religious belief inconsistent with the father's wishes & in these cases the ct., having ascertained that the child has imbibed strong religious impressions, has felt itself bound to see that the sacred duty imposed upon the guardians is discharged with a due regard to the welfare of the child. So again the father may during his life have so neglected the religious education of his child as to leave to the ct. no option but to allow the child to be brought up in accordance with the religious belief, which the child has acquired, notwithstanding the strongly expressed wishes to the contrary contained in the will of the father (WOOD, V.-C.).—*DAVIS v. in a Douay Bible; but they never during his life attended Roman Catholic worship, except on one occasion of great solemnity, to see Mass performed by way of spectacle. He had a Protestant governess for the younger, & placed the two elder children at a Protestant school, & they, with his sanction, attended worship at a Protestant church, & were generally brought up as Protestants. 1286. ————.]—An Englishman, who was a Protestant, in Oct. 1869, married in Germany a German lady who was a Roman Catholic. Previously to the marriage a written agreement was signed by them both, which provided that the children, if any, of the marriage should be educated in the Roman Catholic faith. After the marriage the husband & wife lived together in Germany. He never attended a Protestant place of worship, but often went to mass with his wife. There were three children of the marriage—a daughter born in 1871, a son born in 1873, & another daughter born, just after the death of the father, in Apr. 1876. The first two children were, with the father's knowledge, baptised as Roman Catholics, & in the case of the son, a Roman Catholic priest in England, whom the father knew, acted as godfather at the request of the father himself. The father allowed the mother to bring up the two children as Roman Catholics. He died intestate, & had not appointed any guardian to his children. His only property was some real estate in Lancashire, worth more than £2,000 a year, which passed to his infant son as his heir-at-law, subject to the life estate of the paternal grandfather, who died in 1881. The mother had no fortune of her own. She, as next friend of the infant son, in 1882 took out a summons for the appointment of a guardian & the settlement of a scheme for his maintenance & education. She desired that he should be educated in the Roman Catholic faith. The paternal relations, on the contrary, wished of ct., should be brought up as Protestants.—Re KELLERS (1856), 5 I. Ch. R. 328.—IR.

1285 ii. ————.]—A Roman Catholic father, married to a Protestant, had all his children, eight in number, baptised by Roman Catholic clergymen, but permitted the children, when of sufficient age, to receive instruction & attend divine service as Protestants. They did not receive any religious instruction as Roman Catholics, nor attend the Catholic worship. The father died in the life of the mother, who afterwards was obliged to enter the workhouse, & there registered the children as Protestants. The mother died leaving the eldest child about twelve years of age, & the youngest about one. Her wish was that the children should be brought up as Protestants. The husband on his deathbed was attended by a Roman Catholic priest, & it was alleged that he had expressed a wish that the children should be brought up as Roman Catholics; but evidence was given that he had subsequently expressed a different wish:—Held: the children were to be brought up as Protestants.—Re O'MALLEYS (MINORS) (1858), 8 I. 1287 i. ————.]—An infant, M., whose father was a Roman Catholic, & whose mother was a Protestant, was with the father's consent, brought up in the religion of the mother until she was about twelve years of age, when, on the death of the mother, she was committed to the care of relatives of the mother, & attended & finally became a member of the Presbyterian Church. The father then, for the first time, insisted upon the child returning to live with him, & receiving instruction with a view to becoming a member of the Roman Catholic Church. M., having been brought before a judge of the ct., in obedience to a writ of habeas corpus, the father applied for an order to have her returned to his custody & control. The judge saw M., as a mode of determining what would be for her welfare, & found her to be a young girl of much intelligence, thoroughly understanding her position, most pronounced in her religious views, & strongly opposed to returning to her father's house, even for a period. He was of the opinion that the father's conduct, from the first up to the time of his second marriage, was such as to bring about the conditions of which he complained, by permitting M. to be brought up in a faith different from his own, until she had reached an age when her feelings & convictions were settled & confirmed, & then, to gratify a caprice of his own, seeking to compel her to change the faith in which she had been educated. He refused the order applied for, on the ground that the ct. ought not to lend its assistance in such a case, & that the father must abide by the consequence of his own indifference at a time when his child's ideas were being formed & matured. On appeal:—Held: the judge was right in refusing the order applied for, & the ct. should not aid the father in regaining control of the person of his child, except upon his giving an undertaking that she should enjoy complete religious free-

that the infant should be brought up as a Protestant:—Held: (1) the father by his conduct had abandoned his right to have the child brought up in his own faith, & had indicated a wish that he should be brought up as a Roman Catholic; (2) under the circumstances it would be most for the benefit of the infant that he should be educated in the Roman Catholic faith; (3) an allowance of £800 per annum out of the infant's income was a proper allowance to be made to his mother by way of maintenance.—Re CLARKE (1882), 21 Ch. When a father has voluntarily permitted his children to be instructed in the tenets of a particular religious body, & those tenets have become so rooted in the children's minds that they cannot be shaken without imminent risk of destroying all religious belief whatever, the ct. will not allow him afterwards to insist on a radical change of religious instruction; but when it appears that no such rooted belief has yet been

If the case for interference under such circumstances be rested solely on the ground of the child's religious convictions, it must be established with reasonable certainty that they have some root, & are entertained by a mind of intelligence adequate to understand their importance, & with stability capable of adhering to them; & in order to inform itself on those points, the ct. may, by a personal interview, test the opinions & wishes of the child.—Re GRIMES (1877), 11 I. hold for this purpose. In Mar. 1907, the boy wrote to his guardian that he no longer wished to be educated as a Jew. This letter was sent to the judge, who, after interviews with the boy & further inquiries, came to the conclusion that the welfare of the boy demanded his sanction to a change in his religious education, & he accordingly made an order that both infants should be henceforth brought up in the Christian religion:—Held: it would be morally injurious to the welfare of the boy not to give effect to his wishes, but as there was no evidence to justify any order changing the religious education of the girl, this portion of the order must be varied.

In all orders relating to the religious education of a ward of ct. the words "until further order" must, from the nature of the case, be deemed to be inserted.—Re W., W. v. M., [1907] 2 Ch. 557; 77 L. J. Ch. 147, C. A.

The circumstance that it will be more for the pecuniary interest of the child to be educated in one religious faith than in another will not induce the ct. to interfere with his religious education.

of his child, although the father has no power to prescribe a particular faith for the child.

In applications relative to the custody of wards, the ct. always takes into consideration their interests, as between themselves & their relations.

Now the first question is, whether any pecuniary benefit will induce the ct. to interfere with that course of education which the father has pointed out. . . . I am not so sure that it would be for his benefit to be brought up as a Protestant . . . I should in all probability, be doing the greatest possible injury to the worldly interest of the child by doing that which is now asked, namely, by taking him from the custody of his testamentary guardian & educating him in a religion which, looking to the usual feelings of human nature, would have the effect of alienating him from the person from whom he has the greatest expectations.

. . . It is proper that mothers of children thus circumstanced should know that they have no right, as such, to interfere with testamentary guardians, & if, under the peculiar circumstances, I think it proper now to leave the child in the custody of the mother, it is not in respect of right in that mother, but it is in consequence of that power which the ct. has of controlling the power of testamentary guardians (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).

SECT. 1.—NATURE AND ATTRIBUTES OF THE GUARDIAN'S OFFICE.

See, generally, Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (c. 27), & Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45).

1330. Office of trust.]—Guardians appointed by will according to the statute of 12 Car. 2, c. 24, have no more power than guardians in socage, & are but trustees, on whose misbehaviour, or giving occasion of suspicion, the Ct. of Ch. will interpose.

If any wrong steps had been taken which might not deserve punishment, yet if they were such as induced the least suspicion of the infant's being like to suffer by the conduct of the guardians, as they were in this case, or if the guardians chose to make use of methods that might turn to the prejudice of the infant, the ct. would interfere & order the contrary; & this was grounded upon the general power & jurisdiction which it had over all trusts, & a guardianship was most plainly a trust (LORD MACCLESFIELD, C.).—BEAUFORT (DUKE) v. 1332. —.]—A testamentary guardian is a trustee, & therefore the Stat. Limitations is inapplicable to accounts as between him & his ward.

The view I take of this case is, that the relation of guardian & ward is strictly that of trustee & cestui que trust. A guardian is not only a trustee of the property, as in the ordinary case of a trustee, but he is also guardian of the infant's person, with many duties to perform, such as to see to his education & maintenance. LORD MANSFIELD said "that guardians were but trustees, & that the jurisdiction of the ct. was grounded upon the general power & jurisdiction which it had over all trusts & a guardianship is plainly a trust." This shows that the important & principal part of the relation is not confined to the property, but extends beyond it. I consider that it is not confined to that relation, & that of all the property which he gets into his possession in the character of guardian he is a trustee for the benefit of the infant ward (ROMILLY, M.R.).—MATHEW v. 1398. No guardian existing.—The mother has not such a right to the guardianship in the present case, but that this ct. may certainly control it; she is not testamentary guardian. Her only pretence for the custody of the infant can be either as guardian in socage, or as guardian by nature; but she cannot be entitled to the custody of the present case as guardian in socage, it not appearing that the infant had any lands in socage descended to her; nor can she be entitled as guardian by nature; for which reason the guardianship in the present case is certainly such a one as this ct. may dispose of; & the question is, how this ct. ought to dispose of it? The mother ought not to be allowed it, by reason that she had married a papist. . . . The proper direction will be to refer it to a master to consider who will be a proper person to have the guardianship of her (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—EDWARDS v. WISE (1740), Barn. Ch. 139; 27 E. 1398 i. No guardian existing.—Where both the parents of an infant are dead there is no power under Infants' Guardianship & Contracts Act, 1887, for the ct. to appoint a guardian of the person or property of the infant, but the ct.'s inherent jurisdiction over the persons & estates of infants is saved by that Act, & where the infant has property the ct. will in a proper case appoint a guardian of the person & property of the infant. Where the infant has no property it is not the practice to appoint a guardian of its person, unless a suit has been constituted on behalf of the infant.—Re STUART-FORBES (1907), 27 N. Z. L. After her death the paternal grandfather of the infants applied to the judge of the surrogate ct. to be appointed guardian, who, in opposition to objections made by the sister, did appoint him their guardian:—Held: on appeal, although the Ct. of Ch. had jurisdiction to appoint guardians to infants notwithstanding 22 Vict. c. 93, it would not do so on an appeal like this.—Re MCQUEEN, MCQUEEN v. McMILLAN (1876), 23 Gr. 191.—CAN.

The trustees refused to do so. In a petition presented by the father to the Ct. of Session, the ct. ordained the trustees to pay the income to the father for five years, & continued the petition.—*WEBB v. e. Testamentary direction—How far considered.—Although the ct. pays respect to the wishes & directions of a testator in reference to the guardianship & care of his children, it will not do so where a compliance therewith would clearly be prejudicial to the happiness & moral training of the infants.—ANON. (1858), 6 Gr. 632.—CAN.

f. ———.—In an application for the appointment of a guardian of a minor, the ct. is bound to consider a will, although probate has not been granted. B. Over What Infants.

1403. General rule.]—An infant, born in France, was the daughter of a Frenchwoman, but was a British subject. The father died intestate, & by French law, the mother thereupon was restored to her nationality & became entitled to the legal & natural guardianship of the infant. The infant resided in France, & was entitled to a share of the property left by her father, which was all in France. On an application to the English Cts. to appoint guardians, it was admitted that the mother, having regard to her conduct, was not a proper person to be appointed. Proceedings relating to the custody & guardianship of the infant had been commenced in France, but had been adjourned until it should be seen what order the English Cts. would make:—Held: the English Cts. had jurisdiction to appoint guardians, & under the special circumstances of the case, it was a proper one for the exercise of the jurisdiction.

This ct. has jurisdiction in a proper case to appoint guardians of any infant British subject, wherever that infant may be residing, & whoever may have the custody of that infant abroad (COTTON, L.J.).—Re WILLOUGHBY (1885), 30 Ch. 1433. Unless religious belief already formed.]—The rule that an infant ward of ct. is to be brought up in the religion professed by his deceased father will be departed from if the infant had already received such strong impressions adverse to that religion that it would be dangerous to attempt to educate him in it.

The widow of a Roman Catholic gentleman of rank, all whose relations were Roman Catholics, some time after her husband's death became a member of the Anglican Church, & brought up her only child, a boy, born after his father's death, as a member of that church, till he had arrived at the age of nearly ten years. A suit was then instituted by a relation of the father for making the infant a ward of ct., with a view to having him educated as a Roman Catholic. The Lords Justices, being satisfied, by a personal interview with the infant, that he had received strong impressions, which it would not be safe to disturb, adverse to the Roman Catholic persuasion, refused to interfere with an order of the Master of the Rolls appointing the mother sole guardian, without any directions as to the child's religious education.—STOURTON v. STOURTON (1857), 8 De G. On the petition of the wife a judicial separation was decreed by reason of the husband's adultery & cruelty. The wife claimed the custody of the two children of the marriage, & avowed that her object was to bring them up in the Roman Catholic religion, which she herself professed. The husband, who was also originally a Roman Catholic, had become a Protestant, & the children, who were both young, had been placed by him in a Protestant boarding school, & were by his directions instructed in the Protestant religion. In these circumstances the ct., bearing in mind the fact that while petitioner & resp. had lived together resp. had, in the exercise of his paternal right, caused the children to be brought up as Protestants, & being satisfied that it was for the interest of the children than the course of education so determined for them should not be interrupted, committed their custody to the mistress of the school in which their father had placed them, but gave to both parents full access to them.—D'ALTON v. D'ALTON (1878), 4 P. 1477. — Guardianship contested.]—Although the ct. will sometimes appoint a guardian to an infant without a reference, where no objection is made to the individual proposed, it will in no case dispense with a reference where the guardianship is contested between two parties.

Four persons domiciled & resident in Scotland had accepted the trusts of a Scottish deed, attested by two witnesses, by which they were duly appointed tutors & curators to a Scottish orphan child, whose only property consisted of real estates situated in Scotland. The child having come to reside in England for the sake of its health, & a suit having been instituted by other parties, in its name, for the purpose of making it a ward of this ct.:—Held: on the construction of the deed, it appeared to be made in contemplation of the child's continuing to reside in Scotland, & with reference solely to her so doing; & the care & custody of the child being considered to be, therefore, unprovided for, & the curators who, under the deed, had the management of the property, being parties, & having appeared, to the suit, the Lord Chancellor referred it to the master to approve of a scheme for the residence of the child & to appoint guardians.—*BEATTIE v. The appointment by the mother should, therefore, be in form an appointment of guardians "jointly with the father" of the infant: &, upon an application, under above sub-sect. after the death of the mother, to confirm the appointment, the ct. can make an order under the Act in that form only.

jurisdiction, which is preserved by the same subsect., & by sect. 13 of the Act.

Upon an application to confirm the appointment of guardians by the mother of the infant, the ct. is bound to consider whether the persons appointed as guardians are proper persons to act as such.

The mother of an infant, being separated from her husband, against whom she had commenced proceedings for a divorce, made a will by which she appointed two persons "to be the exors. & trustees of this my will, & so far as I may be able, being at the present time separated from my husband, & suing for a divorce, I appoint my said exors. & trustees, or the survivor of them, to be the guardians or guardian of my infant child." A decree nisi was subsequently pronounced, but shortly afterwards & before the decree was made absolute, the mother died. The infant, a girl aged eleven years, thereupon applied, by one of the guardians nominated by her mother as her next friend, to have the appointment of the persons so nominated confirmed by the ct., & that they might be authorised & empowered to act as guardians of the person of the infant. The ct. was satisfied, upon the evidence, that the father was unfitted to be the sole guardian:—Held: (1) the will must be taken as having reference to the statutory power, & the intention of the testatrix was to exercise that or any other statutory power which she might have; (2) there was a valid appointment of guardians to act jointly with the father within the meaning of the statute, & the appointment must be confirmed.—Re G— (AN INFANT), [1892] 1 Ch. 292; 61 L. By an agreement between S. & N. the children were brought up as Mahomedans, & S. & N. having separated, they went with their father to India, & remained there until the father's death, four years afterwards. By his will N. appointed certain persons guardians of the children.

S. now moved that an order be made giving her the custody of her children, as she admitted that her union with N. was not a marriage, & therefore contended that, as her children were illegitimate, she had the right to the custody of them:—Held: S. had no absolute right to the custody, & the ct. would consider what was best for the interests of the children, & having regard to the nature of their birth, the religion in which they had been educated, & the mode of life which had been adopted for them, it was best for them to remain in the custody of the guardians whom the father had appointed.—Re ULLEE, NAWAB NAZIM OF BENGAL'S INFANTS (1885), 54 L. T. 286; 2 T. L. R. 8, C. A.

1500 i. Misconduct of guardian.—The power over the real estate of infants far exceeds any power that has ever been exercised in England:—Held: the discretionary power of the ct. to order a sale was not determined by the appointment of a guardian, & where the guardian, who was the mother of the infants was opposed to the sale, & neglected or refused to find security, the ct. had power to remove such guardian, & substitute in her stead a suitable person as next friend to file the necessary bond & effect the sale.—Re LAWLOR'S ESTATE (1871), 8 N. The infant, by his next friend, was made a party pltf.:—Held: the surety was justified in asking to be indemnified against loss by reason of the neglect or misconduct of the guardian; there was a community of interest between the surety & the infant, & the order making the infant a party was within the letter & spirit of the rules & the practice of the ct.; whether the infant should be made a party pltf. or deft. was a matter within the discretion of the judge to whom the application was made; & the ct. had power to supersede the guardians & commit the powers & duties to other hands; the guardian appointed by the Ct. of Probate does not occupy a different position, & has no greater immunity from control than a testamentary guardian; the power to appoint under Act of 1894, c. 20, does not abridge the power of the ct. to interfere, whenever necessary, for the protection of infants or their property.—*POPE v. Gross negligence—Fresh action brought after majority—Not barred.]—Gross negligence on the part of a next friend in the conduct of a suit brought on behalf of a person under disability prevents the effect of the bar contained in Civil Procedure Code, s. 103, to the institution of a fresh suit by such person when the disability has ceased. Where a suit for certain property was brought on behalf of two miners by their next friend, & owing to gross want of care & diligence on the part of the next friend, the suit was struck off under sect. 103 for default of appearance:—Held: in a suit afterwards brought by the same pltf.s. on

B. Necessity for Appointment of Next Friend.

1520. Action.]—Where an action is brought in the name of a person as pltf. without his authority & he subsequently repudiates the action, defts. on application in the action, may obtain an order for payment of their costs by the solrs. who issued the writ. So held in a case where an infant was attaining their majority, the suit was not barred by sect. 103. The English rule of law on this point as being the law of equity & good conscience was applied by the ct. to this case, in the absence of any statutory provision.—LALLA SHEO CHURN LAL v. RAMNANDAN DOBEY (1894), 1 L. R. 22 Calc. 8.—IND.

a. ——— Withdrawal of next friend—Appointment of new next friend.]—When the next friend of a minor pltf. withdraws from the suit, it is open to the minor, through another next friend, to have the suit re-opened on review, on the ground that the former next friend, though guilty of no fraudulent conduct, was grossly negligent of the minor's interest in withdrawing from the suit.—RAM SARUP LAL v. SHAH LATAFAT HOSSEIN (1902), 1 L. R. 29 Calc. 735.—IND.

b. Appointment of next friend—Who applies.]—In applying for an order appointing a next friend to act for an infant pltf., the proposed next friend, & not the infant, must be the petitioner; & a petition by the infant with a consent by the proposed next friend is not sufficient.—ALLEN v. 1520 iii. ———.]—The effect of Act XL of 1858, s. 3, read with Code of Civil Procedure, s. 440, is that a minor pltf. must not only always sue by his next friend, but, when the suit relates to the minor's estate, the person representing the minor must either hold a certificate under the Act, or must obtain the sanction of the ct. for the suit to proceed.—DURGA CHURN SHAHA v. NILMONEY DASS (1883), 1 L. R. 10 Calc. 134; 13 C. L. R. 369.—IND.

d. Time for appointing.]—Held: pltf., an infant, having sued by attorney & not by prochein ami was no ground for setting aside the process, for by the practice the prochein ami may be appointed at any time before declaration.—O'REILLY v. VANEVRY (1854), 2 P. R. 184.—CAN.

e. ———.]—An appearance entered by an attorney for an infant deft., no prochein ami having been appointed, is a nullity not an irregularity. Interlocutory judgment cannot be signed until after prochein ami appointed.—FOUNTAIN v. MCSWEEN (1868), 4 P. R. 240.—CAN.

f. ———.]—An infant pltf. can sue out a writ of ejectment in his own name; but after appearance entered, he cannot take any further step, such as giving notice of trial, without having a next friend appointed, & any such further proceedings in the infant's own name will be set aside.—CAMPBELL v. MATHEWSON (1869), 5 P. R. 91.—CAN.

g. ———.]—Where an order is made for the trial of an interpleader issue between an infant claimant as pltf. & an execution creditor, & pltf. in the issue desires to proceed, a next friend should be appointed, & proceedings will be stayed on application of deft. in the issue until such appointment is made.—GRANT v. McDONALD (1888), 5 Man. L. R. 223.—CAN.

l. Letters of administration.]—Letters of administration granted to an infant are not void, but voidable; & semble, until revoked, the infant can sue, qua administrator, & need not be represented, when so suing, by a next friend.—TOLL v. Appeals to the Supreme Ct. of this province & to the Supreme Ct. of Canada were dismissed. Subsequently petitioner applied to have the matter reopened, on the ground that, at the time of the former adjudication, he was an infant under the age of 21 years, & was not legally represented & some additional evidence was offered, which, with the intervention of a next friend & deft. chose to appear, I know of no reason why it should not have been prosecuted without a next friend (JAMES, L.J.).—Re BROCKLEBANK, Ex p. BROCKLEBANK (1877), 6 Ch. D. 358; 46 L. J. Bcy. 113; 37 L. T. 282; 25 W. R. 859, C. A.

1528. — After decree in administration suit—Ignorance of suit before decree—Substitution in place of person appointed.]—A testator gave life annuities to his six nephews & nieces, & directed the residue, which was of large amount, to be accumulated for twenty-one years, & then to be divided among such of the six as should be then living, with a proviso substituting the issue of any who died within that period for their parents. A person nominated by the exors. commenced an action against the exors. for administration of the estate, as next friend of the infant children of one of the nephews, & at once obtained a decree. The father of the infants, who had no adverse interest to them, & against whom there was no imputation, appeared to have been informed that a suit was pending for the administration of the estate, but was not aware that his children were the pltf's. until after the decree had been made. He then applied to be substituted as next friend. The application was refused on the ground that there was no authority laying down that where a suit is about to be instituted on behalf of infants a communication must be made to their father:—Held: the father ought to be substituted as next friend.—WOOLF v. PEMBERTON (1877), 6 Ch. D. 19; 25 W. R. 873; sub nom. WOOLF v. PEMBERTON, Re GREENOUGH'S ESTATE, 37 L. T. 328, C. A.

1529. Mother.]—(1) Upon the question as to which of two administration suits, relating to the same estate, should proceed, the ct. will prefer the mother of infants, as next friend, although in humble life, supposing she is respectable, & direct her suit to proceed, although a decree has been made in the other suit.

(2) The appointment of a next friend is quite distinct from that of a guardian, the latter relating to the education, whereas the former only applies to the property.—HARRIS v. LIGHTFOOT, HARRIS v. HARRIS (1861), 10 W. R. 31.

1530. — As testamentary guardian.]—A father authorised a stranger to act as next friend to his infant children: he died, having by will appointed his wife, their mother, guardian of his children:—Held: the mother had the right to remove the next friend & be substituted in his place.—*HUTCHINSON v. (e) Persons Connected with Interested Parties.

1554. Connection with defendant—Likely to prejudice infant.]—The ct. will remove a next friend & appoint a new one, where the former is so connected with a deft., having an interest adverse to that of the infants, as to make it probable that their interest will not be properly protected by him.—PEYTON v. BOND, PEYTON v. ROBINSON (1827), 1 Sim. 390; 57 E. R. 624.

Annotation:—Distd. Bedwin v. Asprey (1841), 11 Sim. 530.

1555. ———.]—The ct. will not remove a next friend merely because he is nearly related to or connected with deft.; but it must see that there is a probability that the infant's interest will be prejudiced if the next friend is allowed to remain.—BEDWIN v. ASPREY (1841), 11 Sim. 530; 5 Jur. 362; 59 E. R. 978.

1556. ———. Near relation—Defendant accounting party.]—A suit was instituted to carry out articles for a settlement, the father being unable to perform his covenants, & his mother having made an abortive attempt to do so. The bill being by the infant children by their next friend, a near relative of deft., a motion was made to remove him & substitute the brother-in-law of the wife, on the ground of the present next friend's near connection with deft., that he was a stranger to the family, & that deft., being one of the trustees of the articles, had, in fact, filed the bill, & had omitted to enforce the articles. Motion refused with costs. Semble: the mere fact of a next friend being a stranger & a near connection of a deft. is no reason for his removal, unless such deft. be accountable.—PIFFARD v. BEEBY (1866), 14 W. R. 948.

1557. ———. Friendship.]—Doubts having arisen as to the proper custody of an infant, a suit was commenced in her name for the administration of her father's estate. A next friend was appointed who was a friend of defts., the exors. & trustees of the will, & guardians of the infant, & accepted the office at their request, & on an indemnity from their father. The solrs. on the record for pltf. were the solrs. of the exors. On an application in the name of the infant by M., the husband of her paternal aunt, as next friend pro hac vice, to remove the next friend & substitute M.:—Held: although nothing was alleged against the character, circumstances, or conduct of the next friend, his connection with the exors. made him an improper person to act as next friend, & he ought to be removed & M. substituted.—Re BURGESS, BURGESS v. BOTTOMLEY (1883), 25 Ch. D. 243; 50 L. T. 168; 32 W. R. 511, C. A.

1558. Connection with accounting party—Relation.]—Mere relationship to an accounting party is not a sufficient ground for removing a next friend.—S—— v. S—— (1863), 1 New Rep. 384; nom. SANDFORD v. SANDFORD, 9 Jur. N. S. 398; 11 W. R. 336.

1559. Solicitor's clerk—Defendant's solicitor.]—(1) The clerk of the solr. to deft. in the first suit was made the next friend of the infant in the second suit:—Held: he was not necessarily an improper next friend.

(2) Where two suits have been instituted on behalf of an infant & on the hearing the ct. has retained the second bill & reserved the costs, the

ct. will not at a subsequent stage refuse provision for the costs of that suit.—ASHLEY v. ALLDEN, JONES v. ASHLEY (1852), 20 L. T. O. S. 14; 16 Jur. 460.

1560. ———. Solicitor acting for all parties.]—The fact that the next friend of an infant in an administration suit is the clerk to the solrs. who act on behalf of all parties, is not sufficient ground for removing him.—LLOYD v. DAVIES, LLOYD v. BANKS (1864), 3 New Rep. 700; 10 L. T. 183; 10 Jur. N. S. 1041.

(f) Married Woman.

1561. Disability—Marriage after appointment—Married woman co-plaintiff.]—On the abatement of a suit by the marriage of a female pltf., who is also next friend of infant pltf. in the suit, a deft. is entitled to an order that the suit may be revised within a limited time, or that the bill may be dismissed as against him, with costs.—CRISPE v. BRADY (1839), 9 L. J. Ch. 108.

1563. ———. Not removed by Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 1 (2).]—The general rule that a married woman cannot act as a next friend or guardian ad litem has not been abrogated by Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 1 (2), which, in providing that she shall be capable of suing & being sued . . . in all respects as if she were a feme sole is limited to actions relating to herself personally.—Re SOMERSET (DUKE), THYNNE v. ST. MAUR (1887), 34 Ch. D. 465; 56 L. J. Ch. 733; 56 L. T. 145; 35 W. R. 273.

D. Consent of Next Friend to act.

Consent in writing—Filed.]—See R. S. C., Ord. 16, rr. 11, 20.

1564. Absence of authority—Effect.]—The name of a person who had been made the next friend of an infant pltf. without his authority, ordered to be struck out, but liberty was given to co-pltf. to amend by naming a new next friend.

Where a solr. makes use of the name of a person as the next friend of an infant co-pltf. without authority express or implied & no acquiescence is shown on the part of the next friend in the use of his name the solr. may be ordered to pay to the next friend the costs of the suit including the costs of the motion to strike out the name of the next friend from the bill & to pay also to the several defts. their costs of the application.—WARD v. WARD (1843), 6 Beav. 251; 12 L. J. Ch. 332; 49 E. R. 822.

E. Consent of Infant to Institution of Proceedings.

1565. Necessity for.]—Any one may bring a bill as prochein ami to an infant without his consent, because it is at his peril that he brings it, to be answerable for the event.—ANDREWS v. CRADOCK

C. (f).

p. Disability.]—Notwithstanding her change of status by virtue of Married Women's Property Act, 1920 (c. 153), a married woman is not qualified to act as "next friend" of an infant pltf.—HILDEBRAND v. FRANCK, [1922]

q. Obtained by promise not to be made liable for costs—Practice.]—A party alleged that he was induced by pltf.'s solr. to allow his name to be used as next friend on the assurance that he would not be rendered liable to costs. The solr. denied that. It was considered that such a fact could not be established by ex p. affidavits.—BURGESS v. MUMA (1866), 2 Ch. Ch. 43.—CAN.

F. Inquiry as to Propriety of Proceedings.

1569. Infant's interest must be disclosed—When application made.] — Where A. is tenant for life, remainder to his children, & B. has an interest in the growing timber, which, in the usual course of management, will come to be felled during the continuance of A.'s estate, the infants can have no interest in, & cannot be made parties to an agreement between A. & B. for the purchase of B.'s interest in the growing timber. Even if the master has reported that they have an interest, all the proceedings will be rescinded for irregularity, as having been a surprise on the ct. Where an application is made for a reference, to inquire whether any proceeding will be for the benefit of infants, the interest of the infants must be stated to the ct. — ANON. (1822), 1 L. J. O. S. Ch. 33.

1570. Application for inquiry—Time for making.] — It is too late at the hearing of a suit by an infant to object that the suit is not for the benefit of the infant. — LACEY v. BURCHNALL (1863), 3 New Rep. 293; sub nom. LACY v. BURCHNALL, 10 L. T. 408.

Compare No. 1575, post.

1571. ——— At instance of next friend—Whether ordered.] — No reference, upon an application by the next friend of an infant, to see whether a suit which he himself has instituted is for the infant's benefit. — JONES v. POWELL (1817), 2 Mer. 141; 35 E. R. 894.

1572. When inquiry ordered—Improper motives of next friend—Spite.] — A father left a great personal estate to two infant children, & made his wife extrix. A bill was brought in the infant's name, by a relation, as prochein ami, to call the mother to an account. On affidavit of several other relations, that this suit in the infant's name was out of pique, & not for the infant's good, the ct. referred it to a master, who reporting the matter to be so, the suit was stayed. — DA COSTA v. DA COSTA (1732), 3 P. Wms. 140; 24 E. R. 1003, L. C.

1573. ——— Or of absence of benefit.] — Ct. will not direct inquiry, whether suit is beneficial to an infant, unless upon a strong case of no benefit or improper motive. — STEVENS v. STEVENS (1821), 6 Madd. 97; 56 E. R. 1028.

1574. ———.] — Where a bill has been filed on behalf of infants, under circumstances raising a strong suspicion against the motives of the next friend, the ct. will direct an inquiry whether the suit is for the benefit of the infants, & if so, whether such next friend is a proper person to conduct it, or, otherwise, who is a proper person to be appointed next friend in his place. — NALDER v. HAWKINS (1833), 2 My. & K. 243; Coop. temp. Brough. 175; 39 E. R. 937, L. C.

Annotations:—Consd. Clayton v. Clarke (1861), 30 L. J. Ch. 657; Golds v. Kerr, [1884] W. N. 46; Steeden v. Walden, [1910] 2 Ch. 393.

1575. ——— Not on mere suspicion.] — A bill having been filed at the suit of infants, cestuis que trust, by their next friend, charging breaches of trust, & praying the usual administration accounts against the trustees, a motion was made on behalf of defts. that the bill might be dismissed, or for a reference to inquire whether it was for the benefit of the infants that the suit should be proceeded with; & if so, to inquire, whether the next friend was a proper person to fill that character; & if not, to approve of another person to act as next friend. The grounds alleged as a foundation for the motion were, that the suit was set on foot from sinister motives by the father of the infants, who had become bkpt., & was separated from his wife, the mother of the infants, to whose support he had ceased to contribute; that the next friend was a stranger to the matters at issue in the suit, & a mere nominee of the father; & that the proper form of proceeding, if any, was by claim, or request to the trustees to pay the trust fund into ct. under Trustee Relief Act, & not by bill. The evidence for the motion failing to establish the existence of a sinister motive leading to the institution of the suit, or any imputation upon the character or solvency of the next friend, but merely showing that the circumstances under which he was named as next friend were open to suspicion, the ct. dismissed the motion, but without costs, observing, that the question as to the propriety of the suit, & of the form of proceeding therein, might properly be dealt with at the hearing. — SMALLWOOD v. RUTTER (1851), 9 Hare, 24; 20 L. J. Ch. 332; 17 L. T. O. S. 118; 15 Jur. 370; 68 E. R. 399.

Annotation:—Refd. Steeden v. Walden, [1910] 2 Ch. 393.

1576. ——— Institution of action by stranger—Solicitor.] — A suit being instituted on behalf of infants by a solr. wholly unconnected with the family, it was, on the motion of deft., referred to the master to inquire whether it would be for the infants' benefit that the suit should be prosecuted, deft. undertaking to render to the master the accounts prayed for by the bill. — RICHARDSON v. MILLER (1826), 1 Sim. 133; 57 E. R. 528.

1577. ——— Solicitor's son.] — Where an administration suit had been instituted on behalf of infants by a next friend, who was the son of pltf.' solr., & an entire stranger to the infants, & the bill did not allege any improper dealing with the estate by defts., & no affidavit was filed by the next friend explaining his motives in instituting the suit, inquiries were directed: (1) whether the prosecution of the suit would be beneficial to the infants; (2) whether the next friend was a proper person to conduct the suit. — TOWSEY v. GROVES (1863), 1 New Rep. 226; 32 L. J. Ch. 225; 7 L. T. 778; 9 Jur. N. S. 194; 11 W. R. 252.

PENSOTTI* (1874), 30 L. T. 348; 22 W. R. 461, L. J.

1588. Report after inquiry—Petition to confirm—Practice.]—Upon a reference to inquire whether it was for the benefit of infants in whose name a suit had been instituted, that the same should be prosecuted, the master reported that it was, & exceptions to his report were overruled; but a petition to confirm the report, & for payment by deft. of the costs of the reference, was, by the ct. below, ordered to stand over till the hearing of the cause:—Held: such an order was contrary to the practice, & it was discharged, & an order made according to the prayer of the petition.—*RAVEN v. The tenant for life's interest was heavily incumbered. The charges of fraud having failed, & the ct. not being of opinion that it was for the infants' benefit that the suit should be carried on; the bill was dismissed so far as it sought relief in respect of the mtge., & liberty was given to the tenant for life to apply in chambers for an account of the income.—*MCWADE v. 1592. Must exercise judgment & discretion.]—A guardian, in instituting or carrying on a matrimonial suit on behalf of a minor wife against her husband, must exercise sound judgment & discretion; if he carry on such suit without a just foundation, he will be condemned in the costs of the husband. Under no circumstances can a wife in a matrimonial suit be condemned in costs.

When a person as guardian undertakes a suit, he is bound to exercise due caution not merely for the interest of the minor, but also for the sake of common justice, which is due to the individual against whom the suit was instituted (DR. LUSHINGTON).

A next friend, before undertaking a suit, is bound to exercise sound judgment & discretion (DR. LUSHINGTON).—BROWN v. BROWN (1850), 2 Rob. Eccl. 302; 7 Notes of Cases, 391; 14 Jur. 768; 163 E. R. 1325.

I. Removal and Change of Next Friend.

(a) In General.

1607. Next friend cannot withdraw—Without sanction of court.]—The next friend of an infant pltf. cannot withdraw himself from that situation, without a reference to the master.—MELLING v. MELLING (1819), 4 Madd. 261; 56 E. R. 702.

1608. Absence abroad—Abandonment of suit—Substitution of new next friend.]—In a suit by a husband & wife, & their infant children suing by their father, as next friend, for the recovery of property, in which the wife had a separate interest for life, with remainder to her children, the husband went abroad, after a decree had been made to account, & abandoned the suit:—Held: the ct. had not authority on a petition presented by the wife, to appoint a next friend for the wife, & a new next friend for the infants; but the ct. ordered that a person to be named by petitioner should be at liberty to prosecute the suit for the benefit of the wife & children.—GREENAWAY v. ROTHERHAM (1838), 9 Sim. 88; 7 L. J. Ch. 98; 2 Jur. 45; 59 E. R. 291.

1609. Grounds for removal—Neglect of duty.]—The ct. will not, upon petition of an infant party, direct an inquiry whether the cause has been properly conducted; but if the next friend or guardian does not do his duty, he will be removed.—RUSSELL v. SHARPE (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 482; 37 E. R. 452.

1610. — Non-prosecution of action.]—The ct. will change a next friend upon his not proceeding with a cause. A solr. is not to attach without orders from his client; but, where the client is next friend of an infant, & moves to discharge the attachment on that ground, although otherwise regularly issued, it seems the ct. will refer it to the master to see whether it is for the interest of the infant that the next friend should be continued.—WARD v. WARD (1813), 3 Mer. 706; 36 E. R. 271, L. C.

to return by a day named, the referee stayed proceedings until the appointment of a new next friend. On appeal the matter was directed to stand until after that day; & the next friend not having then returned, the appeal was dismissed with costs.—DAVIS v. FENTON (1877), 7 P. R. 261.—CAN.

1609 i. Grounds for removal—Neglect of duty.]—Where a ct. finds that a next friend does not do his duty in relation to a suit, it is its duty not to permit him to prejudice the interests of the minor, but to adjourn the suit in order that some one interested in the minor may apply on behalf of the minor for the removal of the next friend & for the appointment of a new next friend.—DORASWAMI PILLAI v. THUNGASAMI PILLAI (1904), 1 L. L. R. 27 Mad. 377.—IND.

Upon the motion of deft. to discharge this order for irregularity:—Held: the notice so signed by the solr. was regular.—FURTADO v. FURTADO (1842), 6 Jur. 227.

Appointment by solicitor—Whose authority revoked.—The mother of an infant employed a solr. to prosecute a suit on behalf of the infant. The person first named as next friend in the cause died; the mother subsequently discharged the solr., & after such discharge he amended the bill, & named a new next friend without the mother's sanction. The ct. ordered that, on payment by the mother to the next friend of the costs incurred by him in the suit, the next friend should be removed & another appointed, & that the solr. should pay the costs of the application & of the new appointment.—*LANDER v. (b) Procedure

i. In General.

1618. Removal—On notice of motion—Signed by solicitor.—The next friend of an infant having been also appointed by the ct. general guardian & receiver, a motion was made by the infant to remove him from all those offices, the notice of motion being signed by a solr.:—Held: on the authority of Furtado v. Furtado, No. 1611, ante, although a next friend may be removed by a notice of motion signed by the solr., a guardian & receiver cannot, & motion refused, with leave to amend by putting the name of a next friend pro hac.—*COX v. d. Interests adverse to infant.—The ct. would restrain the further prosecution of a suit instituted in the name of an infant, if not likely to be

If the next friend be the mere nominee & creature of his solr., or have interests adverse to the infants, the ct. will remove him & appoint a new one; or if the next friend's solr. be so identified with adverse interests as to render impossible or doubtful that he could consistently prosecute the infant's suit with zeal; the ct. will restrain him from acting, & require a new solr. to 1619. Right of next friend to oppose.

On an application by the next friend of an infant pltf. for the removal of a receiver in the action, the application was refused, but the judge expressed dissatisfaction with the general conduct of the next friend, & ordered that the official solr. should be named as the next friend of the infant in all future proceedings, & that the next friend should deliver up all documents to him. On appeal, this order was discharged, on the ground that, although the ct. had, on a proper application, jurisdiction to remove a next friend, such a course ought not to be taken without giving the next friend an opportunity of explaining his conduct.—Re CORSELLIS, LAWTON v. ELWES (1884), 50 L. T. 703; 32 W. R. 965, C. A.

1620. PART XIV. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 3.

1636 i. Minority unknown to solicitor—Liability to defendant for costs.]—An infant was a part owner of a patent right & engaged in business transactions with respect to it. Along with other part owners he signed a retainer to solrs. to take proceedings to stop the infringement of the patent, & the solrs., not knowing that he was an infant, brought an action for that purpose, using his name as pltf., without a next friend. The action was prosecuted for a time with the result that the infringement ceased, but it was subsequently dismissed with costs against pltf. for want of prosecution. More than a year after he came of age, he moved to set aside all proceedings in the action:—Held: in the circumstances mentioned, he was not entitled to relief on the ground of infancy.—*MILLSON v. g. Liability of solicitor.]—Where an action by an infant has been brought without a properly qualified "next friend" it is a non-compliance with K. B. Rule 44 & being an irregularity under Rule 658 the judge has jurisdiction under Rule 658 to dismiss the action with costs, & such dismissal will not be set aside or modified by an Appeal Ct. Where such an irregularity occurs & notwithstanding that it is merely a mistaken view of the law the solrs. of pltf. may be made liable in the costs of the appeal as no other person appears on the record who can be made liable.—*HILDEBRAND v. h. Remission to county court.]—On an application to remit to the county ct. an action brought by a minor pltf., having no visible means & suing by her father, as her next friend, for damages for injuries sustained while in the employment of deft.:—Held: as pltf. had no visible means, it was necessary for her, in order to retain the action in the superior cts., to show, in the first place, that she had prima facie a cause of action; the statement or suggestion in her affidavit did not sufficiently disclose a cause of action, & the action should be remitted.—DOWLING v. BIRNEY (1901), 36 I. L. T. 33. App.—IR.

SUB-SECT. 5.—CONCURRENT ACTIONS.

1642. Court will restrain one action.]—Ct. will not stay proceedings on either of two bills brought for the same purpose, one by the assignee of the party interested, & the other by the party himself ; but if they proceed, to hearing, the ct. will dismiss that which is improperly brought. Ct. will not on motion stay proceedings on one of two bills, for the same purpose, unless both are brought by the same person, or on behalf of an infant.—GAGE v. BULKELEY (1750), Amb. 103 ; 27 E. R. 65, L. C.

1643. ——— Two suits had been instituted on behalf of infants for the same purpose, & a decree, had been obtained in the second. KENYON* (1866), 35 Beav. 300 ; 55 E. R. 911.

1644. Inquiry as to which most beneficial—Allegation of similar purpose.]—Where two suits are instituted in the name of an infant by different persons, acting as his next friends, it is of course to refer it to the master, to see which is most for the infant's benefit, upon the mere allegation of the counsel, that both suits are for the same purpose : it being at the risk of the party moving, in case the allegation should prove untrue, to have the order for reference discharged with costs upon the special application of the other party. Upon such a reference, the master is at liberty to suggest any improvement in the frame of the suit, & to report any special circumstances that may be for the infant's advantage.—*SULLIVAN v. 1652. ——— On order for leave to amend.]—After an order by the judge, directing two suits to be referred to the master to inquire which was most for the benefit of infants :—Held : (1) an order of course to amend, obtained by pl'tf. in one of the causes, without stating the order of reference, was irregular, & it was discharged ; (2) the ct. had no jurisdiction to take the amendments off the file, even by consent.—*FLETCHER v. 1654. ——— Must be unequivocal.]—Two suits having been instituted on behalf of the same infant pl'tfs., it was referred to the master to inquire & state whether the bills were for the same matters, & if so, which of the suits it would be most for the benefit of the infants to prosecute : but the order did not give the master liberty to state special circumstances. The master reported that the two bills were substantially for the same matters, & that it would be most for the benefit of the infants to prosecute the first suit ; but that, as the same person was solr. both for the next friend & for defts. in that suit, he was of opinion that some other solr. should be appointed for pl'tfs., & that part of the funds in the cause, which were then in a country bank, should be brought into ct. :—Held : the master had given a qualified answer to the question referred to him, & added suggestions which he was not at liberty to make ; & therefore, it was referred back to him to review his report.—GANDERTON v. GANDERTON (1842), 13 Sim. 182 ; 6 Jur. 938 ; 60 E. R. 70.

1655. Effect of report—Whether conclusive.]—Where two suits on behalf of infants by different next friends were referred to the master to ascertain which was most for their benefit, & the master reported in favour of the second suit :—Held : not sufficient to show priority : but some distinct reason must be given why the master had come to a wrong decision.—*TALBOT v. 1658. Grounds for staying one action—Improper institution—Brother of plaintiff's solicitor as next friend.]—Two suits were instituted on behalf of infants, but it was found that it was most for their benefit to prosecute the second. The first suit was properly instituted; but there being some impropriety of conduct on the part of the solr., who instituted it on his own authority, & nominated his brother as next friend, the first bill was, upon an interlocutory application, dismissed without costs.—STARTEN v. 1659. ——— Plaintiffs' solicitor London agents of defendant.]—Two suits were instituted in consecutive months on behalf of the same infant pltf. for the administration of the same estate: a decree was obtained by consent in the latter suit, & an order subsequently made staying proceedings in the earlier suit: the solrs. for-pltf. in the latter suit were the London agents of the solrs. of deft. in both suits:—Held: the later suit ought not to have been instituted, & the conduct of the latter suit was given to the next friend who had instituted the earlier suit.—FROST v. WARD (1864), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 70; 3 New Rep. 348; 9 L. T. 668; 12 W. R. 285; 46 E. R. 301, L. J.

1660. ——— Attempt to protect defaulting trustee.]—Two suits were instituted, in behalf of infants, against trustees for administration, the first by a stranger to the infants, & second by their father, as next friend. The second bill stated that the object of the first was to stave off inquiries from a defaulting trustee, & prayed relief against him in respect of the breaches of trust, & it was charged in affidavits, & not denied, that the next friend in the first suit was falsely described, & was a friend of the defaulting trustee. The ct. ordered the first suit to be stayed.—VIRTUE v. MILLER (1871), 19 W. R. 406.

1661. ——— Benefit primary consideration—Notwithstanding more relief prayed in other suit.]—

(1) Of several suits instituted on behalf of infants, & for the protection of their property, the ct. will give a preference to that which is capable from its frame of being most beneficially & effectually prosecuted, notwithstanding that in point of form the relief sought by another is more extensive.

(2) Trustees for infants, persisting in unnecessary litigation, ordered to pay the costs personally.—CAMPBELL v. CAMPBELL, CAMPBELL v. MACKAY (1837), 2 My. & Cr. 25; 40 E. R. 550, L. C.

1662. ——— Priority in institution not material.]—Where a suit had been instituted by the next friend of infant devisees against the trustee & extrix., & a reference made on the application of deft. to inquire whether such suit was proper for the infant's benefit, & afterwards the extrix. commenced an administration suit, & obtained a decree, the reference in the first suit became unnecessary, & the frame of that suit being defective, the next friend was allowed to apply in the second suit.

The suits are identical, & some suit is proper; the question is, which is the proper suit to be proceeded with? It does not turn on the priority of the suits, but which is most for the benefit of the infants (LORD LYNTHURST, C.).—MATHEWMAN v. WOODCOCK (1845), 5 L. T. O. S. 17, L. C.

1663. Substitution of next friend of action where decree made—For next friend of action where decree not made—Irregularity.]—Irregular to strike out the next friend of the suit which has a decree, where no charge is made against him, & insert the next friend in the suit, which has not obtained a decree.—NANNEY v. WYNNE (1839), 3 Jur. 498.

(2) The next friend in the second suit was nevertheless held entitled to his costs, though no fault on examination could be found with the conductor of the first suit.—CROSS v. CROSS (1845), 8 Beav. 455; 5 L. T. O. S. 234; 50 E. R. 179.

1668. Election to repudiate.]—(1) A bill, filed in the name of an infant, may be dismissed by him when he comes of age.

1670. —.]—Where a suit has been instituted in the name & on the behalf of an infant, of which the infant when of age disapproves, some application by pltf. is necessary to stay further proceedings in the cause; but the motion ought not to be that the bill may be dismissed.

When pltf. comes of age she may either adopt or repudiate the suit. If pltf. should adopt the suit, or even if she does not repudiate it, but assents to its proceeding, she will become liable to all the costs, past as well as future, of the suit; but if she repudiates the suit, she is not liable for any costs, & upon very good grounds; for the suit may have been instituted without her knowledge or approbation.

. . . On the infant coming of age the cause becomes her cause, & she has a right to abandon it; but if she pleases to proceed with the cause, the next friend becomes merely her agent (LORD LYNTHURST, C.).—BOSCHETTI v. POWELL (1845), 5 L. T. O. S. 301, L. C.

1671. — Short time after majority.]—A suit having been instituted by a party as the next friend of an infant married woman against her husband for the specific performance of marriage articles, the lady within a fortnight after she came of age moved to have her name struck out as pltf. The ct. refused to make the order so shortly after the lady came of age, but expressed its readiness to do so on being perfectly satisfied, by her examination, that the motion was made with her consent.

The rule I apprehend to be perfectly clear, any person may sue on behalf of an infant, & may even institute a suit against his wish, subject only to the inquiries of the ct. whether it is for the benefit of the infant, & subject also to the liability for costs (LORD LONGDALE, M.R.).—COOKE v. FRYER (1841), 4 Beav. 13; 5 Jur. 287; 49 E. R. 242.

1677. — Retrospective effect—Return of documents deposited by order—Notwithstanding lien for costs.]—Where an infant on attaining his majority repudiates, before the hearing, a suit instituted on his behalf by his next friend, the repudiation has relation to the commencement of the suit & deeds deposited in ct. by an order therein will be ordered to be returned to the party by whom they were deposited, notwithstanding a claim of lien for costs incurred for infant pltf. in the suit set up by the next friend & his solr.

In the prosecution of a suit on behalf of infant pltf. by his next friend, deeds relating to pltf.'s title were, by order, upon admissions in deft.'s answer, deposited in ct. for the purposes of discovery, & before the hearing pltf., having attained his majority, repudiated the suit, whereupon on application by deft. the deeds were ordered by the judge to be delivered back to deft., notwithstanding the opposition of the next friend, who claimed to have them retained in ct., until the costs incurred on behalf of pltf., while an infant, had been paid. Upon an appeal against this order, supported by affidavits showing that since the judge's order the deeds had been delivered to deft., & by him handed over to pltf. by whom they had been deposited with other persons by way of mtge. for value, the ct. refused the appeal motion with costs to be paid by the next friend.—*DUNN v. 1703. — Appointing new trustees—& vesting of property in them.—Testator, in 1807, executed a deed of tailzie of his Scottish estates, limiting the same to various relatives, with clauses rendering the estates of the successive heirs substitute inalienable. In 1808, testator devised his English estates to three trustees in strict settlement, & gave them his residuary personal estate in trust, to lay out the same in the purchase of estates in England or Scotland, & to settle the purchased English estates to the uses contained in his will, & they purchased Scottish estates to the uses expressed in the deed of tailzie. By the will, power was given to the person entitled to the actual possession of the devised estates to appoint new trustees, on any of the trustees dying or declining to act. Testator died in 1812. On the death of J. D., the first party beneficially interested in the estates, there was a very large residuary personal estate, & he was succeeded in the estates by his son J. D. D., the heir substitute in possession under the deed, & tenant in tail under the will. A very considerable part of the residuary personal estate was invested by the trustees in the purchase of Scottish estates, & a small part only in the purchase of English estates, & these estates were respectively settled to the uses expressed in the deed & will. The trustees having died, & the representative of the last surviving trustee desiring to be discharged, a bill was filed in 1833 by the next friend of J. D. D., an infant, complaining that the trusts had not been properly executed, & amongst other things, seeking the appointment of new trustees, & a declaration of the ct. that the residue of the personal estate ought to be invested in the purchase of real estates in England. The earliest of the heirs substitute after J. D. D. interested in the estates were not parties to the suit, though others more remotely interested therein were, as also the representative of the last surviving trustee. A decree was made in 1833, whereby a reference was directed for the appointment of new trustees, & it was declared that the personal estate remaining uninvested ought to be invested in the purchase of real estates in England. J. D. D., having attained his majority in 1836, executed a disentailing deed, & shortly afterwards the uninvested personal estate was ordered to be transferred to him. He died in 1840 without issue. In 1841, a bill was filed by A. D. F., the next substitute heir in possession under the Scottish deed of tailzie, praying that the decrees & proceedings in the suit instituted on behalf of J. D. D. might be declared irregular, & that pltf. might be relieved therefrom:—Held: A. D. F. was not bound by the decree in the suit of J. D. D., & the heirs substitute under the deed of tailzie were not substantially represented in that suit, & his present bill was a proper bill; the new trustees had been irregularly appointed in the suit of J. D. D., & the personal estate directed to be transferred in 1836 to J. D. D. ought to be restored out of his assets, & it ought to be invested in English & Scottish estates in equal moieties, although a much larger sum had already been invested in Scottish estates than in English.—FORDYCE v. The ct. granted the former part of the motion; but refused, upon the notice of motion, to dismiss the bill as to infant pltf. On the following seal day, a motion was made on behalf of infant pltf., by the former co-pltf., as her next friend for this application, that the bill should be dismissed, with costs, to be paid by the next friend. 1765. — — — Unfounded allegation of ill-treatment—By person having custody.]—A widow, on the death of her husband, entered into possession of the small real & personal property he had left, & out of its rents, & by carrying on his trade, maintained herself & his five infant children, the three eldest of whom were his children by a former marriage. Shortly after the husband's death a bill was filed in the names of all the children by the maternal grandfather of the three eldest, as their next friend, for a declaration of the rights of the infants & for accounts, & the appointment of guardians & of a receiver. Infant pltfs., by their next friend, presented a petition in the cause containing imputations against the widow of improper treatment by her of the infants, & asking the appointment of guardians & of a receiver. The ct. directed a reference to the master, who by his report approved of the widow & her co-exor. as the guardians of all the children, & found that the whole income ought to be allowed for their maintenance. The ct. on petition confirmed this report, & directed that the receiver should pay all the income of the property to the widow for the maintenance of the children, thereby leaving all parties just in the same position as they had been in before the suit was instituted; & the costs of all the proceedings were ordered to be paid by the next friend, & all further proceedings were stayed until further order.—*ANDERTON v. The error arose from a mistake of pltf.'s attorney, who admitted to the prochein ami his liability, & promised to pay the costs. p. Not agent of plaintiff's solicitor.]—A suit had been instituted by a creditor for the administration of the estate of a party deceased, & the agent of pltf.'s solr. was appointed guardian ad litem to the infant defts. After a sale of the lands under the decree, at which pltf., by leave of the ct., had bid for a portion of the lands, a motion was made to change the name of the purchaser. t. Solicitor appointed by mother — Mother's interest not conflicting with infant's.]—A suit was brought for

SUB-SECT. 4.—PLEADING BY INFANT.

A. In General.

1877. Necessity for defence.]—In order to enable an infant deft. to enter into evidence in support of facts which would not otherwise be in issue in the cause, it is proper that they should be stated in his answer; but whatever admissions may be made, or points tendered in issue in the answers of an infant, pltf. is not in any degree exonerated from proving as against the infant the whole case on which he relies.

I think that the answer of an infant, stating an absent deft. is an infant the ct. has like powers as to granting an order for service by publication as in case of an adult; but semble, the notice published should not state that in default of answer the bill will be taken pro confesso.—DUFFY v. O'CONNOR (circa 1866), 1 Ch. Ch. 393.—CAN.

f. — On official guardian.]—In a proceeding by petition under Quietening Titles Act service on the official guardian is good service upon infants who are required to be notified of the proceedings.—Re MURRAY (1890), 13 P. R. 367.—CAN.

—.]—In a mtgo. action, where possession is claimed, the writ of summons if served on the official guardians need not be served personally on the infant heirs of the mtgor. if they are not personally in possession, & the costs of such service will be disallowed.—SPARKS v. PURDY (1892), 15 P. R. 1.—CAN.

h. — On infant's father.]—The guardian intended by Ditches & Water-courses Act, 1897 (c. 285), s. 3, is such a guardian as has by law the management & control of the infant's land, & not merely the guardian of his person:—Held: notice of proceedings under the Act, given to an infant's father whose land was affected by the proceeding, the father not having been appointed guardian of the infant's estate, was insufficient to satisfy sect. 8 of the Act, which requires notice to be given to every "owner," & the result was that the infant was not properly made a party to the proceedings, & was not bound by the award, & the whole drainage scheme fell to the ground.—HEALY v. ROSS (1915), 33 O. L. R. 368; 8 O. W. N. 134.—CAN.

1874 i. Service of notice to appoint guardian ad litem.]—The subpoena & notice of motion for the appointment of a guardian had been served on the persons with whom infant defts. were residing; this was considered sufficient service to entitle pltf. to move.—BOWMAN v. BECKTEL (1851), 2 Gr. 556.—CAN.

1874 ii. —.]—Where the mother & father of an infant deft. were living apart & the infant had absconded & could not be served with notice of application for the appointment, the notice was directed to be served at the residence of the mother, that being the infant's last place of residence; service on the father being dispensed with.—BIGGER v. BEATY (circa 1864), 1 Ch. Ch. 236.—CAN.

1874 iii. —.]—An infant should be served with the bill before the return of the notice of application for the appointment of guardian, otherwise notice of the application will have to be reserved.—ROBINSON v. DOBSON (circa 1864), 1 Ch. Ch. 257.—CAN.

facts which are intended to form the defence of the infant, extremely important, as enabling her to go into evidence as to matters which would not otherwise be in issue in the cause (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—HOLDEN v. HEARN (1839), 1 Beav. 445; 8 L. J. Ch. 260; 3 Jur. 428; 48 E. R. 1012.

1878. —.]—As to the necessity of infants raising the points of their defence specifically by the answer, instead of putting in what is termed the common answer. In a case, in which the defence of an infant had not been properly raised & proved, a decree was made for pltf., without prejudice to any bill to be filed by the infant within six months to establish his right.

In the case of infants, it has been erroneously thought, that it is merely necessary to put in what is called a common infant's answer, submitting his rights to the protection of the ct.; but that is not so, for, in reality, the preparation of an infant's answer in some cases require consideration. He may have a defence, yet at the hearing it may be found impossible to make it effectual, in consequence of its not having been properly raised & the proper facts put in issue by his answer (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—LANE v. HARDWICKE (1846), 9 Beav. 148; 50 E. R. 300.

Accordingly, where a consent action, in which an infant & a married woman were defts., & in which the evidence had been taken by affidavit, was set down on motion for judgment, the ct. gave judgment, but directed that notice of trial should be given to the infant & married woman, & that the action should be placed in the paper again pro forma.—ELLIS v. Subsequently he brought an action against his employers at common law for damages in respect of the same injuries, based on their negligence in not having fenced the machine plane:—Held: the Act by including an apprentice in the general word "workman" did not alter the law applicable to contracts made by infants, & it not being for the infant's benefit to accept compensation under the Act, his election to accept the same did not bind him, & his claim under the Act was therefore no bar to his common law right to sue.—STEPHENS v. Before the trial commenced an agreement for a compromise was entered into, & signed by the counsel both of pltf. & deft., by which the estate was to be divided equally between their respective clients, each of whom was to pay his own costs. Deft. consented to carry the agreement into effect, but he subsequently refused to abide by it:—Held: from the want of reciprocity the ct. would not interfere unless it were for the benefit of the infant; but that, as this agreement was beneficial to the infant, the ct. would have given its sanction to it; but, in consequence of the want of reciprocity arising from pltf.'s infancy, the ct. refused to enforce the agreement upon the withdrawal of the consent of deft.: the counsel of deft. had an implied authority to enter into the agreement; an order of ct. to give effect to it was not necessary; & deft. must pay so much of pltf.'s costs of preparing for the trial as became useless by the refusal of deft. to carry out the agreement; the former order must be continued & the trial proceeded with; & the costs of the petition on which the order was made must be costs in the cause.

1978. —.]—The expediency of a compromise between the owners of an estate, & other parties, one of whom was an infant, depended on the value of the estate. The information & evidence as to the value upon which the other parties consented to, & the Ct. of Ch. sanctioned the compromise, was all furnished by the owners. The owners had at the time in their possession other more detailed information; which would probably have put the ct. upon inquiry, & led to its discovery that the value had been under-estimated:—Held: this was a sufficient ground for setting aside the compromise at the suit of the infant.

This ct. has power to compromise the rights & claims of infants & persons under disabilities, where those rights & claims are merely equitable, has not been & cannot be disputed. It is a power which has been continually exercised by the ct.

1979. ——Pltf., an infant, brought an action by her next friend in the county ct. to recover for personal injuries sustained by her through the alleged negligence of deft. At the trial a judgment of nonsuit was pronounced, & it was suggested that if there was no appeal deft. would not ask for costs. Pltf.'s counsel agreed to this, & the judgment was entered without costs. Pltf. was without means. On an application on her behalf for a new trial:—Held: the agreement was of no benefit to the infant, & was not binding on her.

This is an action by an infant by means of her next friend, who, undoubtedly has the conduct of the action in his hands. If, however, the next friend does anything in the action beyond the mere conduct of it, whatever is so done must be for the benefit of the infant & if in the opinion of the ct. it is not so, the infant is not bound. . . . The position of the infant is such that no costs can be recovered from her either directly or indirectly for she has no estate. . . . The next friend alone is liable for costs (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

The only reason that the next friend of an infant is entitled to bind the infant in matters connected with the cause is that he is the officer of the ct. to take all measures for the benefit of the infant in the litigation in which he appears as next friend (BOWEN, L.J.).

A next friend has no power to enter into a compromise by which the infant gives up a right & the next friend obtains a benefit (FRY, L.J.).—RHODES v. SWITHEBANK (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 577; 58 L. J. Q. B. 287; 60 L. T. 856; 37 W. R. 457; 5 T. L. R. 352, C. A.

H. & Co. stopped payment, & made a compromise with their creditors, & A. then gave notice to H. & N. to call in the money. N. accordingly called on H. & Co. to pay, & they not doing so, filed a bill against H. & the cestius que trust (not making the other partners in the firm parties) praying that the trusts might be carried out under the direction of the ct., & that he might be indemnified, & gave notice of motion for a decree according to the prayer of the bill:—Held: under this notice pltf. was entitled to all the relief he could have had at the hearing; if the adult cestius que trust insisted on their strict rights, the ct. could exercise no discretion on behalf of the infant cestius que trust, as to accepting the compromise offered; & H. must be considered either as having neglected his duty in not getting in the money, or else that at the expiration of three months from the receipt of the notice he had the money in his hands, & in either case would be liable to have a decree made against him for payment of it.—NORTON v. The practice has been . . . to require not only that the compromise should be assented to by the next friend or guardian of the infant, but that his solr. should make an affidavit that he believes the compromise to be beneficial to the infant & that his counsel should give an opinion that he considers it to be so (JESSEL, M.R.).—*Re BIRCHALL, WILSON v. Before certificate a compromise was effected which on a petition in the action was sanctioned on behalf of the infants. The petition did not refer to the alleged improper investments, but the fact of the investment complained of having been made appeared in the answers of the trustees to interrogatories administered to them in that action. After the infants came of age they opposed a decree being passed in its terms. Upon pltf. seeking to have the compromise enforced:—Held: inasmuch as leave of the ct. had not 1989. Compromise affecting infant's contingent interests.]—(1) A ct. of equity has not authority, where there are no litigated rights, to withdraw personal property settled by deed on infants, & give it to others, in consideration of other property to be brought into settlement; even though the arrangement be beneficial for the infants.

Infants were entitled, under a settlement, to personal property, subject to the contingency of five persons dying in the lifetime of A., & subject also to other contingencies; & were also entitled to other personal property subject to various contingencies. It was proposed to withdraw the last-mentioned property from the settlement; & instead thereof, to remove all the contingencies from the first-mentioned property, except that of the five persons dying in the lifetime of A. The master reported in favour of the arrangement, & the ct. was of opinion that it would be beneficial for the infants:—Held: the ct. had not authority to direct the arrangement to be carried into effect.

Deft. then applied that his appeal might be revived, but his application was rejected by the High Ct., on the ground that he had deprived himself of his opportunity of appeal by his own fraudulent conduct:—Held: the effect of setting aside the compromise was to remit both parties to their original rights, & if pltf. was to be allowed to be heard against so much of the original judgment as was unfavourable to her, deft. must similarly be heard against so much of the same judgment as was unfavourable to him.—*KHAJOORONISSA v. The purchaser accepted the conveyance, & paid the purchase money, without seeing the will or having the title investigated. The eldest son of the vendor was not quite twenty-one at the time; he was aware of his interest, but was anxious that the sale should be effected, urged the purchaser to buy, & was privy to the completion of the purchase without giving any notice of title or of the defect in the father's right to convey. The purchaser went into possession & improved the premises, & had no notice of the defect in his title until after the death of the vendor:—Held: he was entitled to hold the property in equity against the issue in tail.—Re SHAVER (1871), 3 Ch. 2010. ———.]—In a suit of C. v. M., instituted in 1858 for the administration of the estate of J. C., who died in 1836, J. B. C. & H. C., the trustees of testator's will, were, by an interlocutory order made in 1860, ordered to transfer into ct. a sum of £4,100 Consols, to answer breaches of trust committed by J. B. C. This order was never obeyed, & process of contempt was issued, which H. C. avoided by leaving England. By an order made upon the further consideration of C. v. M. in 1863, the beneficial interests of J. B. C. & H. C., who were children of testator, were ordered to be impounded, to make good pro tanto the breaches of trust; but no personal order was made for payment, either then or on the subsequent further consideration in 1866. In 1870, H. C. returned to England & resided in the neighbourhood of London, apparently in comfortable circumstances, until her death in 1880. This was known to pltf. in the present action, who was the then acting trustee of the will of J. C., & also to the cestuis que trust. They, however, took no further steps against H. C. in her lifetime; but after her death the trustee commenced the present action against her exors., on behalf of himself & all her other creditors, seeking to make her estate liable in respect of the unsatisfied balance of the £4,100 Consols. Some of the cestuis que trust were still infants. The action was dismissed on the ground that the claim was a stale demand. On appeal:—Held: the cestuis que trust were not barred of their rights by any laches which they or their trustee had committed, but their trustee was the proper person to sue.—*Re CROSS, HARSTON v. 2011. ———.]—Real estate was held in undivided shares by several persons as tenants in common in fee, & all of such tenants in common, except the holders of one share, were sui juris, & owners of the legal & equitable estates & interest in their respective shares in their own right. The remaining share was vested in trustees upon trusts to apply the income or such part thereof as they should think expedient for the benefit of two infants during minority, & for them absolutely upon their attaining twenty-one. In 1868 the property was by a deed, to which all the owners who were sui juris were parties, as were also nominally the infants, conveyed to a purchaser for value, with notice of the infants' interest; & the deed contained a declaration that N., who was a party thereto for that purpose, should stand possessed of a sum representing the infants' share of the purchase money upon trusts for their benefit during their infancy, & if within one month after coming of age they should execute the deed or otherwise convey their interest to the purchaser, then in trust for them absolutely, but if not, then in trust for the purchaser absolutely. The infants came of age in 1884 & 1885 respectively, but did not execute the deed or otherwise convey their interest as aforesaid. The purchaser & his assigns having been in possession since the date of the deed, an action was brought in 1889 by a person claiming under one of the infants to recover her share from assigns of the purchaser. Defts. contended that, at the time of the conveyance of 1868, the infants had no estate, the share in dispute being vested in trustees, with discretionary powers for their benefit merely; that those trustees were barred by lapse of time under Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (c. 57), & that consequently the infants, & those claiming under them, were also barred, & could not recover the share:—Held: the purchaser under the deed of 1868 having entered into possession, with full notice & knowledge of the infants' rights, the claim was not barred by the statute.

Semle: he would also be treated as not being in adverse possession at all, but merely in right of the infants, & not, therefore, as in a position to set up the statute against them or their assigns.

Qu.: whether the purchaser did not also take the property subject to an actual trust for the benefit of the infants of their shares therein, in the event of their failing to execute the conveyance, or take their shares of the purchase money on attaining twenty-one.

The purchaser of those rights & those claiming under him with knowledge cannot set up for their protection the laches of the trustees; & I think that on the infant attaining twenty-one she or those claiming under her were entitled to possession (ROMER, J.).—YOUNG v. HARRIS (1891), 65 L. T. 45.

was transferred by A. & B. into the name of B. only, who appropriated it to his own use. In the year 1818, the father & mother filed a bill against A. & B., to have the stock replaced; & the children, two in number, were co-pltfs., & being infants, sued by their father, as their next friend; but that suit was soon afterwards compromised, upon B. giving security for the payment of interest for the time past & for the time to come. A. subsequently died, & his personal estate was distributed among his legatees; & two of those legatees then died, having received their legacies, & the residuary personal estate of one of them was paid over to her residuary legatee. These distributions were made in ignorance of any demand arising out of the breach of trust in which A. had concurred. The eldest of the two children attained twenty-one in 1821, & the other in 1823. In 1833 they filed a bill alone against B. & the personal representative of A. & his surviving legatees, & the personal representatives of his deceased legatees & the residuary legatee of one of those deceased legatees, & against the father & mother of pltfs., praying to have the fund replaced:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to call upon the surviving legatees of A., & the personal representatives & legatees of his deceased legatees to refund; & that, without any previous inquiry, as to whether pltfs. had known of or acquiesced in the breach of trust, or the compromise of the suit of 1818.

Part XV.—Wards of Court.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

2017. Meaning of—Infants entitled to or interested in fund administered by court.]—A fund was carried over in an administration action to a separate account intituled "The account of A. B. & of X. Y. & his issue" to answer a settled legacy under the will of testator wherein A. B. & X. Y. had life interests. X. Y. was a domiciled Frenchman & he died leaving issue three daughters only, who were all French & married to Frenchmen, two of them having married under age & one being still an infant. A. B. having also died, these three daughters & their husbands petitioned for payment out to them of their respective shares:—Held: the ct. would not in the exercise of its discretion treat the two daughters who had married under age as wards of ct. Semble: the carrying of a fund to separate account of an infant in an action to which the infant is not a party will not constitute such infant a ward of ct., & even if such carrying over would have constituted a natural born British subject a ward of ct. it would not have that effect in the case of an alien not resident in this country.

If a petition was presented to the Ct. of Ch. under its parental jurisdiction & an order made on that petition for the appointment of a guardian of the infant, although the infant was not a party to any action, he would be a ward of ct. in the more special sense of the words.

If there be a fund in ct. under its administration standing to the account of an infant, or to an account under which an infant is entitled, then, inasmuch as the ct. is bound to administer that fund, the infant will be treated as a ward of ct. to the same extent as an infant who is a party to an action for the administration of the property belonging to that infant. Undoubtedly, we use the words "ward of ct." in such a case in rather a special sense. In one sense all British subjects who are infants are wards of the ct., because they are subject to that sort of parental jurisdiction which is intrusted to the ct. in this country & which has been administered continually by the cts. of the Ch. Div. (KAY, J.).—BROWN v. COLLINS (1883), 25 Ch. D. 56; 53 L. J. Ch. 368; 49 L. T. 329.

In case either grandchild should die before that date without leaving lawful issue his or her share was given to other persons, & the will then contained a declaration that if at any time on or before Dec. 31, 1927, either one or both of the grandchildren should "live with or be or continue under the custody, guardianship or control of their father . . . or be in any way directly under his control, all benefits, profits & income provided to be given under this my will to both or either one of them, as the case may be, shall thereby cease & determine, & it shall be at all times & under all circumstances an absolute condition of either one or both of them receiving any income, benefit or legacy under this my will that he or she or both of them shall separately & individually continue to live free from his direct influence & control." In case of forfeiture of the interest of a grandchild under this condition his or her forfeited share was to be held upon the trusts declared on the happening of the death of the grandchild before Dec. 31, 1927, without leaving lawful issue:—Held: (1) the clause was a condition in defeasance of an interest previously given; (2) it was void as being contrary to public policy, because it was inserted with the object of deterring the father from performing his parental duties, & also because it was an attempt to interfere with the discretion of the ct. as to the custody & maintenance of its wards; (3) the condition was bad on the ground of uncertainty.—*Re SANDBROOK, NOEL v. Immediately after the ward came of age she made a settlement of her property, giving a joint power of appointment to husband & wife in priority to the other trusts, & the marriage was arranged to take place without the consent of the ct.:—Held: A.'s undertaking operated only so long as the lady continued to be a ward of ct., & A. would not be committing a contempt in marrying, & the ct. had no jurisdiction to restrain the parties from marrying, or the ward from disposing of her property, as she pleased.—*BOLTON v. 2034. Ward becoming of unsound mind.—The jurisdiction of the Lancaster Palatine Ct. & of the High Ct. of Justice over its infant wards is not ousted by the fact that the wards during their infancy may become of unsound mind. In such cases, therefore, such cts. have jurisdiction to entertain applications respecting the custody & education of the infants, although they may be of unsound mind, & although the question of their sanity may be the principal point in dispute.—*Re EDWARDS, M'NEILE v. 2057. ———.]—Although the ct. will under special circumstances allow an infant ward to go out of the jurisdiction, yet it will not compel the removal of an infant ward out of the jurisdiction.

An infant, being a British subject, & also an American citizen & having lost both father & mother, was brought over to England from the United States, where her property was situated, by a paternal aunt with whom she resided : an application was then made by a maternal aunt, who had been appointed her guardian by the ct. in America, to have the custody of the infant delivered to her with the view of taking the infant back to America. The Lord Chancellor refused to interfere, being of opinion that he had no right to make such an order, even if on other grounds he had thought proper to accede to the application.—DAWSON v. JAY, Re DAWSON (1854), 3 De G. M. & G. 764 ; 23 L. T. O. S. 53 ; 2 W. R. 366 ; 43 E. R. 300, L. C.

2058. In what cases permitted—To visit relations—Upon security given to return.]—Here are two young ladies that desire to go & make a visit to their aunts at Dantzic. But should they be suffered to do this without any security given, they themselves would be out of the reach of the process of the ct. ; & the persons in whose hands they were would be out of the power of the ct. likewise. They might be married during their absence abroad, without any possibility of this ct.'s punishing the parties concerned in it, & their fortunes by that means absolutely disposed of. It is necessary therefore, that before these ladies are suffered to go there, a recognisance should be entered into for their returning. It is necessary likewise, that part of this recognisance should be, that they do not marry whilst they are abroad, without the leave of the ct. Anciently, when wards of the ct. stayed even in England, recognisances of this sort were entered into, that they should not marry without leave of the ct. That practice has of late years been discontinued. But to this day their doing so is judged a contempt (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—JEFFREYS v. VANTE-SWARSTWARTH (1740), Barn. Ch. 141 ; 27 E. R. 588, L. The mother came to England in 1876 to place her son at school, & returned to Jamaica in 1878. In 1880 she came to England to see her children, & had remained there, the daughter, upon leaving school, living with her. With the above exceptions the mother had always lived in Jamaica, & regarded it as her home. She now wished to return thither permanently, & to take with her the daughter aged twenty years & three months, the son, who was apprenticed to an engineer, remaining in England. The children were wards of ct., & the mother had been appointed by the ct. sole guardian :—Held: leave may be given to take a ward out of the jurisdiction without a case of necessity being shown, the ct. having only to be satisfied that the step is for the benefit of the ward, & that there is sufficient security that future orders will be obeyed. Leave was accordingly given upon a relative resident in England being appointed guardian along with the mother.—Re CALLAGHAN, ELLIOTT v. LAMBERT (1884), 28 Ch. D. 186 ; 54 L. J. Ch. 292 ; 52 L. time of their progress & condition, & an undertaking to bring them within the jurisdiction when required.

It is needless to observe that the law, which permits the father to appoint the guardians of his children, will pay the highest respect to the expression of his wishes as to the mode of their education. Every attention ought to be paid to the opinions & to the wishes of a mother; but in point of authority she is upon an equality with the three other guardians.

The ct. will be desirous as far as possible, to consult the feelings & wishes of the mother, but that desire will not induce it in any particular to depart from the course which it may think most conducive to the interests of its wards (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—CAMPBELL v. ENNISMORE (LORD) (1837), 1 Keen, 467; 48 E. R. 386.

2065. ———.— To attend foreign school.—Upon security given to return.]—Testator constituted his widow guardian of his two children then living with him, one, a boy, being the child of another woman, & he gave her £4,000 "to be used for her own & the children's benefit, as she should, in her judgment & conscience, think fit." This (as was held) gave the widow a discretion as to the application of the income between the three objects, which this ct. would not control, if bond fide exercised. Soon after testator's death, the maternal relations of the boy removed him from the widow's custody. The widow married again, & appointed one-eighth of the capital to the boy & the remainder to her own child. The ct., notwithstanding the opposition of the widow, who offered to take the boy back, directed £30 a year to be allowed, out of the income of the £4,000 for his education.

I think that in this case, an order may be made to allow the boy to remain at the school in France; upon an undertaking being given to bring him within the jurisdiction when required (ROMILLY, M.R.).—HART v. TRIBE (1854), 19 Beav. 149; 52 E. R. 306.

2066. ———.— To emigrate with father.]—An undischarged bkpt. about to emigrate to Manitoba where he would obtain an allotment of prairie land, proposed to take his six sons with him. The eldest who was between seventeen & eighteen years old, was an apprentice engineer in the Govt. dockyard at Devonport, & had been there about two years. The infants having been made wards of ct. an injunction was applied for to restrain the father from taking them out of the jurisdiction of the ct.:—Held: an uncle having undertaken to provide for the maintenance of the eldest son, so long as he remained in the Govt. employment & was unable to earn sufficient to maintain himself it would not be for his benefit to accompany his father, & leave to take him out of the jurisdiction of the ct. was refused. Leave was, however, given to the father to take the other five sons with him, & to apply for leave to remove the eldest after the lapse of a year if he was successful in Manitoba.

The action having been commenced for the purpose of making the infants wards of ct. in order to prevent their removal by their father, the onus of satisfying the ct. of the impropriety of so removing them was on the persons who sought to restrain their removal.—Re PLOMLEY, VIDLER v. 2073. Committal—Ignorance that infant ward of court.]—It is no answer to a motion for committal to prison for contempt of ct. in removing a ward of ct. out of the jurisdiction to say that the act was done on the solicitation of the ward & that, although there was knowledge that the girl was a ward of ct., there was not full knowledge of the meaning of that status.

Where there was no knowledge that the girl was a ward of ct. such ignorance of the fact did not altogether exonerate the ignorant parties, but constituted an alleviation of their contempt.—Re J. (1913), 108 L. T. 554; 29 T. L. R. 456; 57 Sol. Jo. 500.

2094. ———.]—Here is a young man, a ward of ct., possessed of a very large fortune, for he had a life interest in real estate of £3,000 a year, & he had the interest of about £120,000, producing together something like £10,000 a year. The guardians seek, & obtain for him, an allowance of £1,300 a year, which was not an undue allowance, having regard to the extent of his fortune, if he had been kept under proper control. But during the last two years of his minority, as far as I can make out, he seems to have had complete power to go where he liked & to do whatever he pleased, no species of control of any sort was exercised over him, & in all these proceedings at Paris there does not appear to me to be any trace of intervention, or even of advice. It is obviously impossible for this ct., with the number of wards which it has under its care, to be aware of their conduct, but it does what it can, & requires the guardian from time to time, to give general information of what is taking place. But there are wards possessed of large fortunes, & of very extravagant habits, who get into difficulties during their infancy (ROMILLY, M.R.).—KAY v. JOHNSTON (1856), 21 Beav. 536; 52 E. Sect. 7.—Marriage: Sub-sect. 1, B.; sub-sect. 2, A. (a), (b), (c), (d) & (e).]

(2) As to wards of this ct. There being a father who consents to the marriage of a lady with a gentleman who is old enough to make a contract according to law, there is no doubt that, the banns being published, or a licence being obtained, they may marry according to law; but what does the ct. do? It says, "you shall not marry; if, during your infancy, you are about to enter a contract which will be injurious to you, although it may be otherwise lawful for you to enter into it, we will restrain you" (LORD ELDON, C.).

(3) This ct. has not the means of acting except where it has property to act upon. It is not, however, from any want of jurisdiction that it does not act, but from a want of means to exercise its jurisdiction; because the ct. cannot take on itself the maintenance of all the children in the kingdom (LORD ELDON, C.).

(4) Whilst the ct. looks at the duties of the father, it considers those duties as duties that impose upon him thus much, that if he be himself of ability to maintain the children, be their fortunes what they may, & to provide for them according to their expectations, it says "you shall provide for them out of your own means, & not encroach upon the property of the children" (LORD ELDON, C.).

(5) I am not aware of any case, in which the ct., where it has taken away from the father the care & custody of the children, has called in aid of their own means the property of the father (LORD ELDON, C.).

(6) In many great families, the eldest infant is in possession of a large property; the younger infants have some little property; & in such a case, the ct. does not measure the duty of maintaining the eldest child by looking at him only, but it considers that it is for his interest that his brothers & sisters should be brought up in respectable stations; & it says, "we will go the length of giving them maintenance, or a part of maintenance, out of his provision, as a part of the maintenance made for him, though to be applied to them," & upon this ground, that it is for his benefit, not that this portion of his fortune should be saved, but that it should be applied to bringing up his brothers & sisters to such situations as to reflect honour upon him (LORD ELDON, C.).—*WELLESLEY v. She then petitioned that the whole fund might be paid to her husband, & expressed her readiness to be examined apart from him in the usual way. But their Lordships refused to examine her and ordered only that the dividends should be paid to the husband during the joint lives of himself & his wife, without prejudice to any question.

The Master of the Rolls had refused to make the order for payment to the husband, on the ground that a marriage under these circumstances was a contempt of ct.; on which point the Lords Justices expressed no opinion.—*BIDDLES v. In 1862 an infant ward of ct. married without the sanction of the ct. An inquiry as to her fortune having been shortly afterwards directed by the ct. a post-nuptial settlement was executed by her in 1863 with the approval of the Vice-Chancellor, whereby she settled her property, a reversionary interest in personalty under a will, upon trusts for herself for life with remainder for the children of the marriage. Testator having died before Malins' Act [20 & 21 Vict. c. 57] came into force, that Act had no application. There was issue of the marriage. During coverture the wife recognised the settlement by various acts, & after a dissolution of the marriage had been decreed on her petition, she successfully petitioned the Probate, Divorce & Admty. Div. to vary the terms of the settlement. The reversionary interest having fallen into possession after the dissolution of the marriage:—Held: (1) neither the sanction of the ct. nor the effect of that Act could make the settlement of the wife's reversionary interest in personalty binding upon her; (2) no acts of acquiescence & confirmation could have that effect unless they amounted, which these acts did not, to an actual disposition by her of the property, 2153. —.]—The ct. has no jurisdiction to compel an infant ward of ct. to make a settlement of his own property because he has been guilty of contempt in marrying without leave. Deft. to an action in which he was made a ward of ct. married without leave, being in the twentieth year of his age. About eight months afterwards, he having in the meantime attained the age of twenty, an order was made on the application of his testamentary guardian in the action & in the matter of the Infants' Settlements Act, that a proper settlement of his property should be settled by the judge, & that he should execute the settlement when so settled. He accordingly executed a settlement approved by the judge. As soon as he attained twenty-one he brought his action to set aside the settlement, & also appealed against the order directing it. He deposed that he had always objected to the settlement, & executed it only because he thought he should get into trouble if he did not:—Held: the order for a settlement must be discharged, for that the ct. had no jurisdiction to compel the ward to make a settlement, & the order was in form & substance an order in invitum, & could not be construed as merely authorising him to execute a settlement which he was willing to make. Qu.: whether, after such a lapse of time, the settlement could be treated as "made upon the marriage" within the meaning of the Infants' Settlements Act, & whether the Act can be resorted to after a male infant who marries under the age of twenty attains that age.—*Re LEIGH, LEIGH v. 2155. — Urgency.—Where the intended husband was about to return to a post abroad, the ct., on evidence of the desirability of the marriage, sanctioned the marriage & an advance for outfit, but directed a reference to chambers to approve the settlement with a direction that it should be proceeded with forthwith.—Ex p. SMITH (1874), 22 W. R. 294.

2157. Wife's property small.—The property of a ward of ct. being small, a declaration by the ct. was made instead of a formal settlement.—WRIGHT v. KING (1854), 18 Beav. 461; 2 W. R. 405; 52 E. R. 181.

2158. — Marriage immediately after majority.—A female ward of ct. was entitled to an income of more than £200 a year for her life for her separate use, but she was not restrained from anticipation. An allowance was made for her maintenance, & the surplus was accumulated in ct. She attained twenty-one, & the next day married. She then, by her next friend, petitioned for payment of the accumulations to herself on her separate receipt. The judge directed the fund to be settled:—Held: the fund must be paid out to the wife on her separate receipt, but, though the fund was under £200, she was required to attend & be examined separately as to her consent.—WHITE v. HERRICK (1869), 4 Ch. App. 345; 38 L. J. Ch. 679; 20 L. T. 386; 17 W. R. 522, L. JJ.

2159. — —.]—A ward of ct., in contemplation of marriage, presented a petition for the settlement of property to which she was entitled, on attaining twenty-one to her separate use. An order for a reference to chambers to approve a settlement was made, but nothing further was done under the petition. The marriage was postponed until immediately after the ward had attained twenty-one, & she then petitioned the ct. for payment to her of the fund:—Held: she was entitled to the order.—SAMS v. CRONIN, Ex p. REED (1873), 29 L. T. 885; 22 W. R. 204.

Proposal approved of.—BLAIR v. CUTHBERTSON (1849), 13 Jur. 442.

B. Special Clauses.

of the Rolls varied the proposed terms of the intended settlement, by giving the intended wife a power to appoint any part, not exceeding one-half part of the principal of the trust money, in favour of the issue of any subsequent marriage of the intended wife.—RUDGE v. WINNALL (1848), 11 Beav. 98; 17 L. J. Ch. 215; 11 L. T. O. S. 346; 50 E. R. 753.

It is not the habit of the ct. upon the marriage of a female ward, to settle the whole of the property in remainder, after an estate for life, to her, upon the child or children of that marriage; because it may happen that she may be left a very young widow & ought, therefore, to have the means of making some provision, in that case, for a second family (LEACH, V.C.).—*LONG v. 2165. Restraint against anticipation.]—On the settlement of a ward, no clause against anticipation was attached to her separate life estate. She incumbered her interest:—Held: the settlement could not be rectified to the prejudice of her incumbrancers.—BLACKIE v. CLARK, COCK v. CLARK (1852), 15 Beav. 595; sub nom. *BLAIE v. On payment out of ct. of the trust fund to the trustees of a post-nuptial settlement the ct. directed that a covenant similar to that in the draft should be endorsed on the post-nuptial settlement.—Re HOARE'S TRUSTS (1862), 4 Giff. 254; 1 New Rep. 161; 7 L. How application made—Petition.]—Semble: on the proposed marriage of an infant ward of ct. entitled to a reversionary interest, which it is proposed to settle on her, the proper mode for her & her guardians to obtain the sanction of the ct. to a proposed settlement, is by presenting a petition for a reference to chambers to approve of the settlement, & then to present a second petition entitled in the matter of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, & in the suit, to sanction her execution of the settlement when so approved of.—Re YATES (1859), 7 W. 2169. Necessity for settlement.]—Whenever a man marries a ward of the ct. without the consent of the ct., the ct. will let the husband have no benefit of the portion, till he makes a suitable settlement.—PHIPPS v. SHELDON (1738), 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 64; 21 E. R. 877.

2170. —.—Punishment for contempt by marrying a ward of ct. by commitment, or in a flagrant case by directing a criminal prosecution for conspiracy, etc., the subject of sound discretion; & though the right to interpose, without complaint, is not affected by time, the exercise of it was dispensed with upon circumstances; no complaint made for eight years; the husband, though his conduct would have justified punishment on a recent application, not being a needy adventurer, but of equal family & fortune; having actually made a considerable settlement; under which the children had vested interests; & alleging misconduct by the wife. The interests of the children not to be affected: but the settlement varied as between the husband & wife by increasing the pin-money, giving her some interest in future property, etc.

When a lady, having property in this ct., marries after she is of age, the ct. does what it can to obtain a proper provision for her: having, as there is no contempt committed, no means of enforcing a settlement, if the husband does not seek to lay his hands upon the property; but if the marriage is a contempt, the ct. vindicating its jurisdiction, is enabled by imprisonment to compel the husband to make a proper settlement. In this case the ct. was not informed for eight years of the contempt, that was committed; considering the case with the view to determine how far it ought to interpose on that ground the ct. always has regard to the subsequent conduct (LORD ELDON, C.).—BALL v. COURTS (1812), 1 Ves. & B. 292; 35 E. R. 114, L. C.

2171. Funds in court—Not paid out without a settlement.]—The marriage of a female infant who is a ward of ct. by being party to a suit concerning property in which she is interested, is a contempt on the part of the husband if contracted without leave, & such contempt gives the ct. jurisdiction over both parties, & it may refuse to part with any portion of the property of the wife during the joint lives even upon the application of both, & whether the wife at the time of consent is of age or not. In cases of this description the ct. exercises its jurisdiction with a view to what is most for the benefit of the ward & her children.

a settlement under a commitment for marrying a ward of the ct. a power was directed to be inserted, enabling the wife to settle the interest of a moiety of her fortune upon any future husband for life. The husband on undertaking by his counsel to execute the settlement was discharged.—WINCH v. JAMES (1798), 4 Ves. 386; 31 E. R. 196.

A settlement approved by the master, where no power of appointment in default of issue was given to the wife, but the property was given over to her next of kin, was reformed by giving to the wife such a power by will only, with provisions, that the property, upon failure of children, & in default of such appointment, should go to her next of kin; & in the event of her surviving her husband & having no children, that it should be at her own disposal; & in the event of her marrying a second time & having children of the first marriage, that she should have a power of appointing to each child of the second marriage a sum not exceeding that given to each child of the first.—*BIRKETT v. 2189. Street trading—Restricted by bye-law—Validity of bye-law.]—The N. corpn. made a bye-law that parents should be liable to a penalty if they suffered a child to be selling articles in the street after a certain hour:—Held: the bye-law was made in excess of the powers given by Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (c. 50), s. 23, being too general & absolute, & justices rightly refused to convict thereunder.—MACDONALD v. LOCHRANE (1887), 51 J. P. 629; 3 T. L. R. 464, D. C.

See, further, PUBLIC HEALTH.

2190. — What amounts to—Boy calling at customers' houses—On behalf of employer.]—A person may be engaged in street trading within Employment of Children Act, 1903 (c. 45), s. 2, although he is not trading on his own account but is in the employment of another person.

A bye-law made under the sect. by resps., the Corpn. of East Ham, provided that no boy under sixteen should "be employed in or carry on street trading" unless he wore a badge. Appls., a co-operative & industrial society, carried on (inter alia) the business of bakers, & had a number of establishments where they sold goods. By their servants they called at certain periods on members of the society at their houses & supplied them with their goods from vans, each of which was in charge of a vanman & a boy. One of the boys was between fourteen & sixteen years of age & was in the employment of appls. at a weekly wage. He called at the house of a member of the society who was called upon daily. He had a basket of bread taken from the van. He knocked at the door, which was opened by the member, who asked for two loaves, for which she paid him 6d. He handed the money to the vanman. When he went to the house he did not know how many loaves the member would buy, or if she would buy any. The vanman & boy were also permitted to sell in a similar manner to persons who were not members of the society at their own houses any bread which was left over after all the requirements of members of the society had been met. The boy would have sold bread to persons other than members of the society had he been asked to do so by them, but, in fact, he had never done so. He did not wear a badge. Appls. having been convicted by a magistrate for unlawfully employing the boy in street trading without his wearing a badge contrary to the bye-law:—Held: the conviction was wrong, for Employment of Children Act, 1903 (c. 45), s. 2, read together with the definition of street trading contained in sect. 13, indicated that the statute prohibited trading & seeking customers in the street where the street was used as a market place, & did not prohibit legitimate business between a shop & customers in their houses.—*STRATFORD CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. v. 2191. — Child employed as agent—News-vendor—Relationship of master & servant not essential.]—The offence of employing a child in street trading within Employment of Children Act, 1903 (c. 45), s. 3 (2), may be committed where the relation between deft. & the child is that of principal & agent; the enactment is not confined to the case of employment as a servant. A child received from resp., a wholesale & retail news-vendor, newspapers which he proceeded to sell in the streets, paying resp. for them at the rate of 9d. per dozen copies sold, the child making a profit of 3d. per dozen. He returned unsold copies to resp., who stated that if he saw the child destroying unsold copies he should prevent him if he could. The magistrate found that the relation of master & servant did not exist between them, & dismissed the information:—Held: on the facts the relation was that of principal & agent, & the resp. had employed the child within the Act, & must be convicted.—MORGAN v. PARR, [1921] 2 K. B. 379; 90 L. J. K. B. 1199; 125 L. T. 307; 85 J. P. 165; 37 T. L. R. 587; 19 L. G. R. 277; 26 Cox, C. C. 739, D. C.

Annotation:—Folld. Sweet v. Williams (1922), 128 L. T. 379.

2192. — — —.]—Applt., a newsagent, authorised two boys to obtain newspapers at his expense, his arrangement with the boys being that he should receive part of the money obtained by the boys by selling the papers in the streets, any unsold papers to be handed over to applt. Applt. also gave football programmes to two other boys on the terms that he was to receive from them a sum proportionate to the number sold, & that unsold programmes should be returned to him. Applt. exercised no control over the boys & they received no payment except their profits on the sales. On informations against applt. for "employing" the boys in street trading contrary to a bye-law made under Employment of Children Act, 1903 (c. 45), as amended by Education Act, 1918 (c. 39), s. 13, the justices found that each of the boys was an agent of applt., & was in that sense employed by him, & they convicted him:—Held: the boys, being occupied in street trading, were "employed" in street trading within the Act & the bye-law, & as there was evidence that each of them was employed by applt. as his agent, the convictions must be affirmed.—SWEET v. WILLIAMS (1922), 128 L. T. 379; 87 J. P. 51; 67 Sol. Jo. 183; 21 L. G. R. 23; 27 Cox, C. C. 373, D. C.

2193. Child employed by agent of employer—Liability of employer.]—By a bye-law made under Employment of Children Act, 1903 (c. 45), s. 3 (1), no child shall be employed between certain hours; & by sect. 6 (3) of the Act, "where an employer is charged" with an offence under the Act he shall be entitled upon information laid by him to have the person whom he charges as the actual offender brought before the ct., & if "after the commission of the offence has been proved" the ct. is satisfied that the employer had used due diligence to comply with the provisions of the Act, & that the other person had committed the offence in question without the employer's knowledge, consent, or connivance, the other person shall be summarily convicted of the offence, & the employer shall be exempt from any fine. A vanman in the employment of the respondent, a baker, employed for his own convenience & benefit a child to deliver bread to resp.'s customers during hours forbidden by the bye-law. The child was actually engaged & his wages paid by the vanman, & his engagement was a voluntary & gratuitous act on the part of the vanman & formed no part of any arrangement between him & resp. Resp. had no knowledge that the child was so employed except during permitted hours. Resp. was charged with having unlawfully employed the child during prohibited hours contrary to the bye-law:—Held: (1) the mere fact that resp. was charged with the offence did not, in the absence of any evidence of a contract of employment of the child during prohibited hours by or on behalf of resp., make it incumbent upon him, under sect. 6 (3) of the Act, in order to claim exemption from a fine, to charge the vanman as the actual offender; (2) as there was no evidence of any unlawful employment of the child by resp., either directly or by an agent purporting to employ the child on his behalf, no offence by resp. had been proved.—ROBINSON v. HILL, [1910] 1 K. B. 94; 79 L. J. K. B. 189; 101 L. T. 573; 73 J. P. 514; 26 T. L. R. 17; 7 L. G. R. 1065, D. C.

2194. Contract with child under fourteen—Work carried on between prohibited hours—Contract void.]—The father of appct., who was a lad between thirteen & fourteen years of age, asked resp., a barge owner, to take on the lad as an odd boy & teach him the barge trade. Resp. agreed, & undertook to give the boy so much a week as his services were worth to him & his food when out with a barge. There was evidence that on more than one occasion the boy had to start with a barge before 6 a.m. On the day of the accident he had gone to work at 3 a.m. The county ct. judge found that there was a contract of service, but that it contravened Employment of Children Act, 1903 (c. 45), which makes it illegal to employ a child under the age of fourteen under any contract of service, between 9 p.m. & 6 a.m. The learned judge held that the contract of service, being thus rendered an illegal contract, was void. No claim under Workmen's Comp. Act, 1906 (c. 58), could be founded upon it. Accordingly he gave his award for resp. On appeal:—Held: the award was right.—POUNTENEY v. TURTON (1917), 34 T. L. R. 103; 62 Sol. Jo. 159; 10 B. W. C. C. 601, C. A.

Part I.—Nature of Injunction.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1. Ancillary to claim for damages.]—An injunction is ancillary to the claim for damages & cannot be granted as a substantive form of relief by itself (LORD STERNDALÉ, M.R.).—DAVEY v. ROBINSON, [1923] as reported in 1 K. B. 563, C. A.

2. Court will not compel performance of illegal act.]—The ct. will not grant a writ of injunction under C. L. P. Act, 1854 (c. 125), when by so doing deft. would be called upon to do an illegal act.—LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RY. CO. v. WEBB (1863), 15 C. B. N. S. 450; 12 W. R. 51; 143 E. R. 860; sub nom. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. CO. v. WEBB, 9 L. T. 291.

Annotation:—Reid. Mid. Ry. v. G. W. Ry. (1873), 42 L. J. Ch. 438.

3. —.]—CHAPMAN v. CRAYS GAS CO., LTD. (1864), 28 J. P. Jo. 724.

4. Court will not order an impossibility.]—(1) Where pltf. has proved his right to an injunction against a nuisance or other injury, it is no part of the duty of the ct. to inquire in what way deft. can best remove it. In such a case a reference before the decree to an expert under Court of Chancery Act, 1852 (c. 80), s. 42, as to the existence of the injury, or as to the best mode of removing it is improper.

The C. lunatic asylum was built in 1851, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, & was under the government of the committee of visitors of the county of M. appointed under Lunatic Asylums Act, 1853 (c. 97). In 1865 an information was filed at the relation of a local board of health to restrain the committee of visitors from permitting the sewage from the asylum to be a nuisance injurious to public health. The existence of the nuisance, which had been a continuing nuisance from the time of the erection of the asylum, having been proved, one of the judges, at the hearing of the cause, referred it to an expert under Court of Chancery Act, 1852 (c. 80), s. 42, to inquire as to the existence of the nuisance & the best means of removing it:—Held: such reference was improper & an injunction ought to be granted.

(2) But when the difficulty of removing the injury is great, the ct. will suspend the operation of the injunction for a time, with liberty to deft. to apply for an extension of time.

(3) No doubt there are cases where the ct. will take care not to pronounce an idle & ineffectual order; for instance, the ct. will not issue a mandatory injunction where it is impossible that the mandatory injunction can by any means be complied with. The simplest illustration of this is the case of cutting down timber. It would be idle when the trees have been cut down to make an order not to allow the trees to remain prostrate, & all that can be done in such a case is to leave the parties to their remedy for damages. Take another illustration. There might be a bank to prevent the influx of the sea, & that bank might be most improperly destroyed; the ct. would restrain the performance of the act if it were in time to do so, but the act having been once done, & the sea admitted, the ct. could only then leave the parties to their remedy, for damages, considering it impossible to exclude the sea (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).

(4) Semble: the delay of fourteen years from the commencement of the nuisance to the filing of the information would be no bar to the relief, but at all events where the time had been occupied in negotiations & attempts to remove the nuisance the delay was immaterial.—A.-G. v. COLNEY

a. General rule.]—The ct. interferes by injunction only to prevent or restrain injuries to civil property & in defence of, or to enforce, rights which are capable of being enforced at law or in equity. The ct. has no jurisdiction to restrain persons from acting without authority.—CALLOWAY v. PEARSON (1890), 6 Man. L. R. 364.—CAN.

b. Where legal remedy inadequate.]—The ct. will only grant a writ of injunction in cases of extreme necessity, where redress cannot be obtained in the usual legal mode.—HALIFAX CITY v. NOVA SCOTIA ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH CO. (1859), 4 N. S. R. (Coch.) 83.—CAN.

c. —.]—Granted where remedy at common law inadequate & impossible for jury to estimate damages.—MASON v. SHEDD (circa 1879), R. E. D. 478.—CAN.

d. —.]—The right of the ct. to grant an interdict is not restricted to cases of vindication of pecuniary interests only, but extends to cases of the protection of other rights, the interference with which will work an injury to the party applying for which no other relief would constitute adequate reparation.—BURGERS v. JOUBERT (1866), 1 R. 351.—S. AF.

e. Prevention of continuing injury.]—The principle upon which the ct. grants an interdict is to prevent the infliction of a continuing injury.—BOYES v. BRAND (1864), 1 R. 178.—S. AF.

f. Injunction operative till dissolved.]—Resps. obtained against

5. —.]—Defts. were a local board constituted in Nov. 1875, under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55). Pltf. complained that for some time before & since defts. became the sanitary authority, sewage was allowed to fall into a stream passing near his residence so as to pollute it & cause a nuisance to him. He complained to defts. in May, 1876, & nothing having been done he brought an action against them in July, 1876, for damages & an injunction:—Held: assuming that an actionable nuisance existed, as defts. had themselves done no act to create or increase it, pltf. had no cause of action.

It would be contrary to the course of the ct. to make a decree of that nature against defts., unless the ct. is satisfied that there is some particular mode by which they can carry into effect this scheme of drainage (COTTON, L.J.).—GLOSSOP v. HESTON & ISLEWORTH LOCAL BOARD (1879), 12 Ch. D. 102; 49 L. J. Ch. 89; 40 L. T. 736; 44 J. P. 36; 28 W. R. 111, C. A.

—A colliery co. having railways from their collieries, with junctions with the line of a railway co., claimed the right, under Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 92, to use the railway. After some correspondence as to the engines to be used for that purpose, the railway co. protested against the colliery co. using the railway with engines belonging to another railway co., & finally refused to allow them to use the railway. The colliery co. then attempted to run a train on to the line, but found the gates at the junction locked. They were likewise told that the signals & points would not be worked for them. They then filed their bill, alleging that the engines had been previously approved for another purpose, & praying for an injunction to restrain the railway co. from obstructing them in the use of the line. On motion the injunction was refused on the ground that defts. could not be compelled to work the signals. Pltfs. then amended their bill, alleging their right to have the signals worked for them by defts., & extending the injunction prayed for accordingly:—Held: although sect. 92 of the Act gave a right to use the line on certain terms, still the ct. would not grant an injunction, as it could not enforce the performance of an obligation to work the signals from time to time, that being a continuous act.—*POWELL DUFFRYN STEAM COAL CO. v. SECT. 1.—DISCRETION OF COURT.

12. In common law courts.]—Semble: under the power of granting injunctions conferred on them by C. L. P. Act, 1854 (c. 125), s. 82, the cts. of common law will not grant an injunction as matter of course where a legal right has been invaded, but will take the circumstances of the case into consideration.

In an action for obstructing ancient lights, with a count for an injunction under C. L. P. Act, 1854 (c. 125), s. 79, after a verdict had passed for pltf., the ct. granted an injunction, under sect. 82 of that statute, to restrain defts. from continuing the wrongful acts complained of in the action, & from committing any injury of the like kind relating to the property & rights of pltf. mentioned in the declaration, & from erecting, keeping erected, & continuing the erection of so much of the wall & buildings as was opposite a certain messuage & premises of pltf. mentioned & described in the declaration, & known, etc., so or in such manner as to darken or obstruct any of the ancient lights or windows of the messuage & premises, & from erecting any other building & doing any other act whereby the light & air coming to & entering his messuage & premises by means of the windows might be obstructed, or such messuage & premises might be in any way darkened, & from the repetition or continuance of any act whereby an injury of a like kind might happen to pltf.; the writ of injunction to lie in the office till next term, defts. undertaking to pull down as much of the wall & building as should be sufficient to restore to pltf. the full enjoyment of the light & air he had previously, & to do same to the satisfaction of a surveyor to be agreed on or nominated by one of the judges of the ct., defts. to pay the costs of the rule & of the surveyor.—JESSEL v. CHAPLIN (1856), 27 L. T. O. S. 159; 2 Jur. N. S. 931; 4 W. R. 610.

Annotation:—Reid. Smith v. Smith (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 500.

13. In Court of Chancery.]—In granting an injunction after a pltf. has established his right at law, the ct. is not guided by the amount of damages; the ct. will consider whether the injunction will afford pltf. the relief to which he is entitled, & will not grant it merely because the pltf. has a legal right to the thing sought to be protected.

Pltf. had occupied for many years a factory for worsted spinning on a stream, & claimed a right of having the water come to his works in a pure state. Deft. erected dye works on the same stream, by which the water was polluted. Pltf. brought an action against deft. & recovered a farthing damages, & now applied for an injunction to restrain deft. from a continuous infringement —Object of.]—An injunction in a possessory cause is only to bring the deft. into court. He may disobey it, but then he must answer interrogatories as under an attachment, and then the court decide upon the right; if against the deft. he is in absolute contempt, & the court will not take off the attachment till he abate the nuisance.—*BODKIN v. of his rights:—Held: a person may by long user acquire a right to the water of a stream free from pollution; he may have no proprietorship in the stream, & may acquire a right to pour polluted matter into a stream as against all new comers; a person having established his right at law is not, as a matter of course, entitled to an injunction, particularly where the injunction would not restore pltf. to the right he has established, & where the act complained of may be compensated by pecuniary damages; in this case the evidence proved that, owing to the increase of polluting matter poured into the stream from other sources than that of deft.'s works, pltf. could never be reinstated in his original rights; the damage might be compensated by money; & pltf. had been guilty of such an amount of acquiescence as would disentitle him to an injunction.

Pltfs. have not used due diligence in vindicating their rights. They stood by while defts. were constructing their works & they suffered defts. to use their works after they constructed for a period of nearly five years without giving them any hint that they were doing anything that they had not a lawful right to do. On this ground alone pltfs. are not entitled to an injunction (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—WOOD v. SUTCLIFFE (1851), 2 Sim. N. S. 163; 21 L. J. Ch. 253; 18 L. T. O. S. 194; 16 Jur. 75; 61 E. R. 303.

].—(1) The grant of an injunction to restrain a person from doing a particular thing is an act dependent on the discretion of the ct., & in exercising that discretion a ct. of equity will consider, among other things, whether the doing of the thing sought to be restrained must produce an injury to the party seeking the injunction; whether that injury can be remedied or atoned for, & if capable of being atoned for by damages, whether those damages must be sought in successive suits or could be obtained once for all.

Two leases were granted of pieces of land with some buildings on them, one granted in 1798 for 999 years, the other granted in 1824 for 988 years. There was no reservation of a power of re-entry for breach of covenant, nor was there any negative covenant obliging the lessee not to change the use of the premises. There was a power of re-entry, for rent in arrear & no sufficient distress on the premises. In each lease there was a covenant by the lessee that he, his exors., etc., will "during the term hereby granted, preserve, uphold, support, maintain, & keep the same demised premises, & all improvements made & to be made thereon, in good & sufficient order, repair, & condition; & at the end or sooner determination of this demise shall & will so leave & deliver up same unto" the lessor, his heirs, etc. The premises had been used as corn stores for some years, & afterwards as artillery barracks & dwellings for married soldiers. They had fallen into disrepair; it became necessary to repair them; the lessee thought it would be beneficial to convert the store buildings into dwelling houses, which would much increase their value, & was proceeding to convert them accordingly, when the lessor filed a bill to restrain him, alleging waste:—Held: this was not the case of enforcing a negative covenant where the words of contract were clear & indisputable; the waste alleged was meliorating waste, & in the circumstances, the ct. below had, in the due exercise of its discretion in such matters, properly refused to interfere by injunction.

(2) The ct. will not grant an injunction to prevent waste unless there is some real & substantial injury to the inheritance.

(3) If parties, for valuable consideration, with their eyes open, contract that a particular thing shall not be done, all that a ct. of equity has to do is to say, by way of injunction, that which the parties have already said by way of covenant, that the thing shall not be done; & in such case the injunction does nothing more than give the sanction of the process of the ct. to that which already is the contract between the parties. It is not then a question of the balance of convenience or inconvenience, or of the amount of damage or of injury; it is the specific performance by the ct. of that negative bargain which the parties have made, with their eyes open, between themselves (LORD CAIRNS, C.).—*DOHERTY v. SECT. 2.—HIGH COURT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—ORIGINAL JURISDICTION OF COURT OF CHANCERY.

15. Origin of jurisdiction.—The origin of the jurisdiction of this ct. in regard to injunctions, & to what extent.

When this ct. first granted injunctions, it seems to have taken its jurisdiction from the writ of prohibition of waste; & to have extended it against a tenant for life, or a tenant for years from ploughing ancient meadows, from throwing down ancient inclosures, which, though not strictly, is of the nature of waste; from printing books, & from exercising new inventions; from the working of mines, possessing bills now out of use in this kingdom, but still in use in Ireland; & this ct. will grant an injunction whether covenant, or no covenant. q. What court will consider.—It is a well-known principle, in matters of injunction, that the ct. will, in general, have regard not only to the strict right of the parties, but also to the surrounding circumstances. No injunction will be granted to the petitioner, if it does not bring him any practical good. An injunction will not be granted when public

common overstocks it; this ct. will grant an injunction (LORD BATHURST, C.).—GOODESON v. GALLATIN (1771), 2 Dick. 455; 21 E. R. 346, L. C.

16. Injury to property.]—A.-G. v. SHEFFIELD GAS CONSUMERS Co., No. 811, post.

17. —.]—The foundation of the jurisdiction in equity to interfere by injunction is the existence of an injury to property of such a nature as to render the property in a material degree unsuitable for the purposes to which it is now applied or to lessen considerably the enjoyment of it. Such an injury is considered by the ct. to be incapable of compensation in damages.—JACKSON v. NEWCASTLE (DUKE) (1864), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 275; 4 New Rep. 448; 33 L. J. Ch. 698; 10 L. Violation of right—Breach of contract or confidence.]—The ct. will interfere by injunction to prevent a party availing himself in any manner of a title arising out of a violation of right or breach of contract or confidence. The cases in which the ct. refuses to interfere by injunction until the legal right is established at law have no application to cases in which the ct. exercises an original & independent jurisdiction to prevent a wrong arising from a violation of right or breach of contract or confidence.—*ALBERT (PRINCE) v. 21. Separate property of married woman — Liable to payment of costs.]—An action by a married woman "suing in respect of her separate estate" was at the trial dismissed with costs, to be taxed & "payable out of her separate property, but not otherwise." The only separate property of the pltf. consisted of a share coming to her under a will. Before the taxation of debts, costs had been completed by certificate, the trustees of the will being about to distribute their estate & pay pltf. her share, debts applied for the appointment of a receiver to receive the share & hold it as security for the costs when taxed:—Held: independently of Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 25, there was jurisdiction to protect by injunction or the appointment of a receiver the fund out of which the costs were payable, & a receiver ought to be appointed.—*CUMMINS v. 26. —.—The ct. has no jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain a person from proceeding with an arbn. in a matter beyond or outside an arbn. agreement, although such arbn. proceedings may be futile & vexatious; & the mere circumstance that the arbn. will be futile & vexatious affords no sufficient ground, under Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 25 (8), for granting an injunction. Therefore, where W. & L. entered into a partnership for carrying on a theatre under an agreement containing a usual arbn. clause, & L. served W. with a notice referring to arbn. the question whether the theatre should be sold or not, the ct. declined to grant an injunction restraining L. from taking any further step in the arbn., although it was of opinion that the question was not one which fell within the arbn. clause.—*WOOD v. 28. —.—Pltfs., who were the owners of the steamship Den of Mains, chartered her by charterparty dated Apr. 26, 1911, to defts. M. & co., to load a cargo of beans at Vladivostock, & to proceed to a port in the United Kingdom & there deliver the cargo "agreeably to bills of lading." On June 10 a cargo of about 6,000 tons was loaded, & bills of lading made out to the order of M. & co. or their assigns were signed by the master & handed to M. & co.'s representative. M. & co. had, by a contract dated Apr. 27, 1911, sold the cargo to defts. the B. co., on the terms of a "basis delivered" contract, by clause 10 of which the contract was to be void as regarded any portion shipped which might not arrive. On June 12 defts. M. & co., under the contract of Apr. 27, declared to the B. co. that the beans had been shipped by steamship Den of Mains. On arrival of the vessel at Liverpool, the port of discharge, M. & co. handed to the B. co. the bills of lading indorsed against a payment. When the discharge had been completed it was alleged that there was a shortage of 171 bags, & the B. co. having paid only in respect of the quantity actually delivered, M. & co. instructed them to make a corresponding deduction from the freight, but pltfs. refused to acknowledge the claim for short delivery. A dispute having thus arisen, M. & co. gave notice that they demanded an arbn. under a clause in the charterparty which provided for arbn. "by arbitrators, one to be appointed by each of the parties to this agreement, if necessary the arbitrators to appoint a third," & formally required pltfs. within seven clear days to appoint their arbitrator. Pltfs. did not appoint an arbitrator, & defts. after the expiry of the seven days gave notice of the appointment of a gentleman to act as sole arbitrator. Pltfs. thereupon took out a summons for further directions, asking (inter alia) for an injunction to restrain first defts. from proceeding with the arbn., alternatively that leave be given to pltfs. to revoke the submission to arbn.:—Held: there was no jurisdiction in the ct. to grant the injunction asked for.—*DEN OF AIRLIE S.S. 31. —.—(1) An estate was laid out for building & sold in lots, & the purchasers of the different lots executed a deed by which they covenanted with the vendor not to erect any buildings beyond a certain line, the covenant being subject to a proviso that it should not be personally binding on any one except in respect of breaches committed during his sole or joint seisin of the lot to which it related. In 1872 the purchaser of lot B. built upon it a bakehouse beyond the line. Pltf. about the same time bought the opposite lot A. No complaint appeared to have been made by any one of the erection of the bakehouse until this action was commenced. In 1876 deft. purchased the residue of a mtge. term in lot B., & in 1877 commenced building upon that plot a wooden stable beyond the line. Pltf., as soon as he heard of this, wrote to complain on Mar. 17, 1877, at which time the stable was built up to the eaves. Deft. proceeded to complete the stable, which was finished on the day on which pltf. commenced an action for an injunction to restrain deft. from allowing any buildings to continue on his land beyond the line:—Held: the injunction ought not to extend to the building which had been allowed to remain for five years without complaint, but must be confined to buildings erected since deft. acquired his title.

Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 25 (8)) to grant an injunction in all cases in which it shall appear to the ct. "just & convenient" so to do, the ct. may, in any case in which it has power to grant prohibition, grant an injunction to restrain the proceedings in the inferior ct. 42. — Public Health (Building in Streets) Act, 1888, (c. 52).]—The first point taken by defts. is that there is one remedy only, namely, the remedy given by the statute [above Act]. In my opinion that point is concluded by the decision in A.-G. v. Ashborne Recreation Ground Co., No. 36, ante, approved in Devonport Corpn. v. Tozer, No. 47, post. I am clear that there is not one remedy only, namely, the statutory remedy. There is first of all the statutory obligation not to build without the written consent, & if that is disobeyed apart from any question of penalty there is a remedy by injunction because it is a public general Act prohibiting certain matters in the interests of public health & in order to preserve uniformity in the width of the public streets, & that is a matter for which the A.-G. can sue (FARWELL, J.).—*A.-G. v. but as it was by the bill & not by arguments or objections on the motion for the injunction that the right of pltf. to institute the suit must depend, & as there was no allegation in the bill that the books & papers which deft. refused to deliver up were of such a character & value as to require the interposition of a ct. of equity, or that

43. — Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55).]—Crude sewage was discharged by a local authority into the bed of a natural stream which flowed intermittently. The stream passed through pl'tfs.' land & discharged into a tidal river. Part of the stream was culverted over. The culvert, which had been constructed under private agreements with an owner of the pl'tfs.' land prior to the passing of above Act was in bad repair. The culvert permitted sewage to escape on to pl'tfs.' land, which was periodically overflowed & sewage deposited thereon:—Held: the bed of the stream was a public nuisance & the culvert had become a sewer & was vested under sect. 13 of above Act, in the local authority, who were liable in damages & must be restrained by injunction.

Semble: although sect. 299 of above Act provides a statutory remedy by complaint to the Local Government Board in the case of a local authority making default "in the maintenance of existing sewers," it does not preclude a private individual from obtaining damages & an injunction against the local authority in respect of a common law nuisance arising from that default.—*A.-G. v. 44. — Unless expressly provided — Private Act.]—On the bank of a canal constructed under an old Act of Parliament a mill had been built. In consequence of the working of a coal mine the canal & mill had subsided, & water leaked from the canal into the mill. The mill owner brought an action against the canal co. for an injunction & for damages:—Held: (1) though a co. authorised by Act of Parliament were not under the same liabilities as a private person, they were liable for damages if they were guilty of negligence, & the canal co. had been guilty of negligence, inasmuch as they might have prevented the damage; & they were bound to compensate the mill owner. But, under the special provisions of their Act, compensation must be recovered as directed by the Act & not by action; (2) such being the case, an injunction would not be granted, & apart from this, inasmuch as the time & extent of any further subsidence could not be foreseen, there ought not to be an injunction.

(3) It would be wrong to enjoin a co. or an individual from permitting that to be done which is really beyond his control. Not beyond his control in this sense, that there is a vis major or an act of God paramount; but beyond his control in the sense that he cannot by any precaution or by any works with reasonable certainty prevent that happening which all contemplate as likely (KEKEWICH, J.).—*EVANS v. Any damage caused by the proper exercise by the local authority of the right in question is a matter for compensation under sect. 308 of above Act, & forms no ground for an injunction against the local authority or for an action for damages by the owner of the land on which is the bed of the stream.—*DURRANT v. 47. — — — — — Bye-law.]—Defts. were the owners of a triangular piece of land within pl'tfs.' borough. Two sides of the triangle abutted upon public highways within the borough. Defts. in pursuance of a building scheme, erected houses on their land fronting the highways. Pl'tfs. alleged that defts. were laying out the highways as "new streets" which did not comply with the requirements of the borough bye-laws as to width, & they claimed, first, an injunction, & secondly, a declaration that pl'tfs. were entitled to remove or pull down any work begun or done by defts. in contravention of the bye-laws. The bye-laws which were framed under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), prescribed a penalty for infringement, to be recovered by summary proceedings, & provided that pl'tfs. might, subject to any statutory provision in that behalf, remove, alter or pull down any work begun or done in contravention of the bye-laws:—Held: bye-laws could not be enforced by action for injunction, but only by special remedies thereby provided, or by way of information by the A.-G.—*DEVONPORT CORPN. v. authority. The plans were certified by the borough surveyor as being in order, & were afterwards approved, subject to a slight amendment, by a resolution passed by a committee of the corpn. of L., the urban authority for the district. Subsequently various proceedings of the committee, including the resolution as to the plans, were approved & adopted at a general meeting of the corpn. A minute to this effect was entered in the minute book of the corpn., approved at the next general meeting, & thereupon signed by the chairman of the corpn. The new erections projected beyond the building line, & pltf., the owner of an adjoining house, brought this action, alleging that no "written consent" of the urban authority within sect. 3 of above Act had been obtained; & that, in consequence, the erection constituted a breach of such sect. He maintained that he had suffered special damage thereby, & had therefore a private right of action; he claimed damages & a mandatory injunction against deft. :—Held: upon the true construction of sect. 3 of above Act only one statutory offence was thereby created for which a fine, to be exacted by the urban authority, was constituted the appropriate penalty. The exaction of this fine was therefore the sole remedy, & pltf. had no cause of action.—MULLIS v. HUBBARD, [1903] 2 Ch. 431; 72 L. J. Ch. 593; 88 L. T. 661; 67 J. P. 281; 51 W. R. 571; 1 L. G. An objection was taken that an action for damages for the injury to the fishery & for an injunction restraining the continuance or repetition of the acts complained of would not lie in view of the penalties imposed by above Acts:—Held: the legislature had provided means for enforcing the prohibitions in above Acts, & that was the proper mode to deal with such a case as the present; &, although an illegal act causing special & peculiar damage to the property of another person might justify an action to abate the mischief, it could not be said that any & every person having fishery rights in the river in question could maintain an action against the mill owners, but some special & definite damage clearly attributable to the illegal act must be established.—*FRASER v. any owner of mines, etc., lying within a certain distance of a canal, was authorised to apply to the comrs. of the navigation, to have a railway made over the lands of other proprietors, intervening between them & the canal, for the purpose of communicating with it; & if it should appear to the major part of the comrs., that such road was fitting or necessary, it was to be lawful for the proprietor of the mine, etc., to make it, subject to certain restrictions expressed in the Act; & it was provided, that if any person should think himself aggrieved by anything done in pursuance of the Act, he might within six calendar months appeal to the quarter sessions. Under this Act, the comrs., by their award, authorised deft. to make a railway over the lands of pltf. Pltf. having filed his bill to restrain the execution of the work, on the ground that the railway was not fitting & necessary, an injunction was granted.—DUDLEY v. HORTON (1826), 4 L. J. O. S. A dispute having arisen between defts., who were a local authority, & pltf. about a drain which pltf. had interfered with, defts. gave notice to pltf. that they would enter on his land & reinstate the drain; but they afterwards abandoned their intention, & instead took proceedings against him before the magistrate. Thus, where pltf. obtained an ex p. injunction on the facts stated in the bill, but other facts came out in deft.'s answer raising a question of law on which the right of pltf. to the injunction depended:—Held: the omission of pltf. to bring these facts under the notice of the ct. was of itself a sufficient ground for dissolving the injunction.

A. Equitable Right Free from Doubt.

64. —.]—A Railway Act empowered the co. to make calls upon the shares, &, in case of non-payment, to sue the proprietor, or to declare the shares to be forfeited, prescribing certain formalities to be observed in the declaration of such forfeiture. The Act also allowed an owner of shares, not in arrear for calls, to sell & transfer his shares with certain formalities; & it authorised the co. to buy up shares offered for sale. Pltf., a registered proprietor of one hundred shares, & a director of the co. offered to the other directors to forfeit & relinquish his shares; the directors accepted the offer, & a deed was prepared for the purpose by the solrs. of the co., & was executed by pltf. None of the formalities required by the Act for the forfeiture or sale & transfer of shares, were complied with. In Aug. 1837, pltf. ceased to be a director of the co. In the same month, a call was made on the shareholders of the co.; & in May, 1838, a subsequent call was made. In Aug. 1838, the co. required pltf. to pay the whole of the calls on his shares; &, on his default to do so, they, in Dec. 1838, commenced an action at law against him for the amount of such calls. Pltf. filed his bill, & obtained the common injunction, which was extended to stay trial of the action. The co. obtained the order nisi to dissolve, on putting in their answer. Upon cause being shown, the judge continued the injunction:—Held: (1) the ct. cannot, upon an alleged equity, interfere with an admitted legal right, unless there be a manifest certainty that, at the hearing of the cause, pltf. will be entitled to relief; (2) the title to relief was not so clear as to justify the ct. in continuing the injunction, except upon the terms of pltf. giving judgment in the action, & paying the amount sued for into ct.—PLAYFAIR v. BIRMINGHAM, BRISTOL & THAMES JUNCTION RY. CO. (1840), 1 Ry. & Can. Cas. 640; 9 L. J. Ch. 253, L. C.

p. Where result of an appeal l.]—The equity ct. has no jurisdiction to restrain proceedings at law pending an appeal to the Privy Council on the mere grounds that they are, in the opinion of the primary judge, reasons for thinking it doubtful whether the decision at law will be sustained on the appeal, & that, unless the proceedings be restrained, applt., though successful, may, through the interim acts of resp., lose the fruits of victory. To justify an injunction in such circumstances, there must be shown some ground of equity outside of, or contrary to, the legal rights of the parties.—BROWN v. PATTERSON (1883), 4 N. S. W. L. Pending decision on facts by jury.]—As by the practice in this colony issues of fact in actions for specific relief are determined by a jury, & not by the judge:—Semble: in such actions, wherever the declaration contains allegations essential to pltf.'s right to relief, which involve an issue of fact, an interim injunction ought to issue until that fact be decided by a jury, provided always that there be, in the opinion of the ct., sufficient ground apparent on the face of the declaration for sustaining the injunction until the hearing or trial of the disputed issues.—MASONIC HALL CO., LTD. v. HARDWICK, FENN & HUDSON (1893), 1 J. R. 93.—N.Z.

t. Pending amendment of pleadings.]—Although the facts appeared to establish a prima facie case of illegality which would be a ground for refusing relief, the proper course, in view of the fact that the illegality had not been pleaded as a defence was to grant an injunction until further order of the ct., reserving to defts. power to move to vary or discharge the order, & thus bring up the question of illegality for further consideration.—WILSON MALT EXTRACT CO., LTD. v. JOHNSTON* (1881), 29 Gr. 67.—CAN.

When this ct. is applied to, if there be doubt, it becomes the ct. to be very cautious in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction; & this for two reasons, first, because, if the legal title fails, the ct. has interfered without cause; & secondly, & this is the principal reason, because there is no comparison between the error in refusing & that in granting an injunction, for, if granted, it does more injury to deft. than not granting it can possibly cause to pltf. The question of the legal right being in doubt, is a matter for the serious attention of the ct., & one to which it is right that weight should be given; but it is not a matter which renders it incumbent on the ct. to refuse the injunction. It must be guided by a discretion exercised according to the exigencies & the nature of each particular case (BRUCE, V.-C.).—OLLENDORFF v. BLACK (1850), 4 De G. & Sm. 209; 20 L. J. Ch. 165; 16 L. T. He subsequently commenced practising within the prescribed limits, & a suit was instituted to restrain him from so doing:—Held: (1) an agreement by pltf. to continue deft.'s employment on the old terms could be inferred; there was consideration to support the bond, & pltf. was entitled to an injunction; (2) the point was one that ought to be decided on motion without waiting for the hearing.

In an action for infringement of the patent, it had been held invalid at the trial & in the Ct. of Appeal, but on appeal to the House of Lords the patent was held to be valid & a certificate of validity was subsequently granted. After the grant of the certificate the patentees commenced an action for infringement of the patent against different defts., & moved for an interim injunction to restrain defts. from infringing the patent. Defts. filed evidence setting out new grounds of invalidity of the patent, & it was stated on their behalf that they intended to contest the action & do all they could to impeach the validity of the patent. Defts. on these grounds resisted the motion for an interim injunction:—Held: there was no evidence before the ct. showing that defts. were doing such a business as that the granting of an injunction would inflict irreparable damage on them; & having regard to the fact that the only evidence furnished by defts.' expert was to the effect that, if the information furnished to him by defts. could be proved to be accurate, then the prospects of success were good, & in view of the fact that a certificate of validity had been granted, an injunction, to which pltf's. were prima facie entitled, ought to be granted.

129. —.]—By three Acts of Parliament of the same session, a railway co. was empowered to make three distinct lines, forming a cluster, & not a continuous line. In the next session an Act was passed, declaring the co. to have been & to be only one co., & authorising & requiring them to grant a lease of the lines to another co. They completed only one of the lines, which was worked by the other co. under the provisions of the last Act. Some months after it was obvious that the other two lines could not be completed within the time prescribed by the Acts, a shareholder in the first co. filed a bill, seeking to restrain it from applying its funds otherwise than for the purpose of constructing all three of the lines; but he did not make the co., who were lessces, parties to the suit:—Held: more inconvenience would arise from the ct. interfering than from its abstaining to do so; &, on this account, as well as on the grounds of acquiescence & want of parties, an injunction granted by the ct. below was dissolved.

Qu.: whether railways forming a cluster, differ from a continuous line with respect to the propriety of granting an injunction against the construction of part only of an undertaking authorised by the legislature.

From the facts before the ct., for more than twelve months before the bill was filed, pltf. must have known that the abandoned lines would be abandoned & that there was no substantial chance for making either of them within the time fixed by Parliament, & yet there was no bill filed (KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J.).—HODGSON v. Defts., who were auctioneers, fitted up with stalls & pens a neighbouring piece of ground, & issued circulars stating that weekly sales of cattle by auction would be held there on Mondays. Pltfs. brought their action to restrain defts. from holding their proposed sales, as being an interference with pltfs.' market:—Held: defts. undertaking to keep an account, an interlocutory injunction ought not to be granted, for that, if an injunction was granted & it turned out that defts. were in the right, there would be great difficulty in ascertaining the compensation to which they would be entitled, whereas, if an injunction was refused, & pltfs. succeeded at the trial, there would be no difficulty in giving them compensation, & their market would suffer no permanent injury from the sales by defts. in the meantime.—*ELWES v. A few of the windows in the new house included the space occupied by ancient windows, but were of larger dimensions; several others included some portion of the space occupied by ancient windows; & in some cases the spaces occupied by ancient windows were entirely built up in the new house. Defts. commenced to build a house on the opposite side of the street, which if completed according to the plans would materially interfere with the light coming to pltfs.' windows. On a motion for a interim injunction the ct., holding that pltfs. had shown an intention to preserve, & not to abandon, their ancient lights, & that there was a fair question of right to be tried at the hearing & considering that the balance of convenience was in favour of granting an injunction rather than of allowing defts. to complete their building with an undertaking to pull it down if required to do so, granted an injunction till the hearing.—*NEWSON v. 140. —.]—(1) Both pltfs. & defts. were calico printers. Pltfs. had registered four designs, & some months after registration discovered that goods bearing designs similar in effect to theirs were being sold by defts. Defts.' designs did not actually produce the minutiae of pltfs.' designs, but they were a combination of similar drawings so arranged & coloured as to produce a similar effect. Defts. admitted that they had submitted pltfs.' designs to their artist in Paris so that he might, whilst producing the same effect, which was the fashion in vogue, avoid imitating the minutiae of pltfs.' designs. The question arose whether a registered design, consisting of a dominant & of subordinate parts so arranged as to produce a certain general effect, could be infringed by a design producing a similar effect, although such design imitated neither the dominant nor the subordinate parts of the original & registered designs. It was contended that general effect could not be registered:—Held: pltfs. having established a prima facie case, on the balance of convenience & inconvenience, an interlocutory injunction must be granted until the hearing of the action.

They moved for an interlocutory injunction. Defts. contended that there were other methods of removing the carbon, & that *pltf.*s. in order to succeed must show that in defts.' filaments it had not been removed physically:—Held: on the evidence it was doubtful whether in case of defts.' filaments the carbon had been removed physically; & on the balance of convenience, an interlocutory injunction should be granted.—*OSRAM LAMP WORKS, LTD. v. (c) Undertaking in Damages.

See Part XI., Sect. 6, post.

B. Withholding or Suspending Injunction.

(a) In General.

168. Undertaking to abide by any order made at hearing.—A ct. of equity interferes by injunction to prevent an injury in respect of a legal right, simply on the ground of the damage it produces to property ; & the jurisdiction of the ct. is not confined to restraining injury to the enjoyment & comfort in the occupation : therefore it is not necessary that pltf. filing a bill for an injunction to restrain such an injury should be in the actual occupation of the property.

Where a pltf. filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the erection of an addition to the house adjoining one of his own, so as to interfere with the windows, which he alleged were ancient lights, some of which had been recently enlarged, & some new lengths had been opened, & an interim order had been granted ; upon a motion for an injunction the ct. gave pltf. liberty to bring an action at law, but allowed deft. to proceed with the new building to a specified height, on his undertaking to abide by any order the ct. might make as to pulling down any addition which might be made to the erection complained of by the bill, & also undertaking to admit at the trial that the erection had been carried to such specified height.—WILSON v. TOWNEND (1860), 1 Drew. & Sm. 324 ; 30 L. J. Ch. 25 ; 3 L. T. 352 ; 25 J. P. 116 ; 6 Jur. N. S. 1109 ; 9 W. R. 30 ; 62 E. R. 403.

170. Undertaking to assess & pay damages—Compulsory taking of land.—By an agreement between pltf. & the agent of a railway co., the former agreed to sell to the co. a certain portion of a field for the price of £229 in the whole, being £120 for the land, & £109 for compensation for damage by severance to the remaining portion. The agreement contained a stipulation that in case additional land shall be wanted by the co., the same shall be taken & paid for after the same rate per acre. The co. subsequently took possession of a second portion of the field for purposes authorised by their Act, & entered upon the same without having previously paid the purchase-money for that second portion, after the rate specified in the agreement, & without having previously agreed upon or ascertained by reference

162 i. As condition of continuing injunction.—A bill filed to restrain proceedings at law to enforce a judgment having been dismissed, the ct. continued the interim injunction obtained during the progress of the cause until the decision of the ct. of appeal, upon paying into ct. the amount of the judgment, or giving security to the satisfaction of defts.—COTTON v. CORBY (1868), 7 Gr. 50.—CAN.

168 i. Undertaking to abide by any order made at hearing.—A motion for an injunction to restrain the infringement of a patent, was ordered to stand until pltf. brought an action at law. There was a verdict for pltf. Deft. tendered a bill of exceptions, pending which the motion was renewed. The ct. granted an injunction ; pltf. undertaking to abide any order which the ct. might make, by directing an issue, or otherwise, to ascertain the damage, if any, which deft. should sustain by obeying the order, if deft. obtaining judgment in the action.—BAXTER v. COMBE (1851), 3 I. Ch. R. 245.—IR.

to a jury the damage occasioned by the severance of the second portion from the remaining portion of the field. Upon the undertaking of the co. to pay the amount of damage to the land by the severance, & to take proper proceedings, if necessary, for ascertaining the amount of such damage, the injunction was withheld.—JONES v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (1840), 1 Ry. & Can. Cas. 684, L. C.

171. Undertaking to proceed with due diligence.]

—Sects. 70, 71 of its special Act provided for the crossing by the railway of roads not being turnpike roads. Sect. 72 provided, that a turnpike road which shall be crossed by the railway shall be raised or sunk so as to pass over or under the railway. The railway being proposed to cross the N. road in the mode provided for by sects. 70, 71, pl'tfs., the proprietors of the road, filed their bill, insisting that the road was a turnpike road, & praying to restrain the railway co. from crossing over, or using same, until they should have complied with sect. 72. On a motion for an injunction, the judge being of opinion that the road was not a turnpike road, & therefore not within sect. 72, refused the motion, but on the application of pl'tfs. directed a case for the opinion of a ct. of law upon the question. A case was accordingly made for the opinion of the Exch. Ct., & a certificate returned by the judges of that ct., stating, that the N. road was a turnpike road. The judge, on an application by the railway co., refused to send the legal question for the opinion of another ct. of law. Upon a motion for the injunction as consequent upon the above certificate:—Held: as the objects of pl'tfs. must be to procure for the public using the road a compliance with sect. 72 of the special Act, upon the railway co. entering into an undertaking to proceed with & complete a bridge over the road with all possible despatch, an injunction ought not to be granted during the time that must necessarily elapse in building the bridge.—NORTHAM BRIDGE & ROAD CO. v. LONDON & SOUTHAMPTON RY. CO. (1840), 11 Sim. 42; 1 Ry. & Can. Cas. 653; 9 L. J. Ch. 277; 4 Jur. 529; 59 E. R. 789.

173. —.]—Deft. owned a warehouse at H., which he had insured for about a third of its value in several insurance offices, & which was burnt down by the negligence of servants of the corp'n. of H. On a motion in a suit instituted by the insurance cos. to restrain deft. from suing the corp'n. for less than the whole loss, & from compromising the action to the prejudice of pl'tfs., & from refusing to allow pl'tfs. to sue the corp'n. in his name, he undertook to sue the corp'n. for the whole loss, & not to compromise the action otherwise than bond fide:—Held: this undertaking gave pl'tfs. all the relief to which they were entitled before the hearing.—*COMMERCIAL UNION ASSURANCE CO. v. 174. Undertaking not to proceed further—Unless authorised by Parliament.]—The committee of management of an incorporated navigation co. having entered into an agreement with a proposed railway co., for the sale of the navigation, etc., on a bill being filed by the shareholders in the navigation co. to restrain the committee from carrying this agreement into effect, it was held that the parties to the agreement on the part of the railway co. were necessary parties to the suit; & upon a motion for an injunction for the purposes aforesaid, the ct. refused the motion upon the committee undertaking to do nothing in the matter unless authorised by Parliament, & the railway co. undertaking to permit pl'tfs. to be heard in Parliament against the proposed railway bill.—PARKER v. RIVER DUNN NAVIGATION CO. (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 192; 9 L. T. O. S. 292; 11 Jur. 624; 63 E. R. 1028.

175. Without leave of court.]—On an application for an injunction to restrain a railway co. from taking proceedings to summon a jury under the compulsory clauses of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 18), the ct. thought that pl'tf. would have been entitled to an injunction but for the circumstance that the time limited for the exercise of the compulsory powers was on the point of expiring; but that the doubt as to the validity of such proceedings after that period, although the usual notice had been given of the intention of the co. to take the land, was sufficient ground for declining to grant the injunction, on the co. undertaking not to act on the result of the jury process without the leave of the ct.—WOOD v. NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RY. CO. (1849), 3 De G. & Sm. 368; 64 E. R. 519.

176. — Until hearing.]—A motion for injunction was by arrangement turned into a motion for decree, a time fixed by which pl'tf. was to file any affidavits he might desire, & also for deft. to file his affidavits in answer; while deft. until the hearing undertook not to continue the act complained of, erection of a building to the injury of pl'tf.'s lights, so as to increase the obstruction of light.—OLARKE v. OLARK (1864), 5 New Rep. 72; 11 L. T. 366; 13 W. R. 133; subsequent proceedings (1865), 1 Ch. App. 16, L. C.

177. —.]—The objects of the A. co. as stated by art. 3 of its memorandum were (inter alia) to raise capital & invest it in such bonds, stocks, & securities as therein mentioned; to sell any part of the assets & to accept the consideration in cash, shares, or other securities, & to divide any assets of the co. in specie among its shareholders; to amalgamate with any person, cos., or firms carrying on business of a like nature. The D. co. carried on a similar business. The A. co. agreed with the D. co. to sell to the D. co. all its assets, except 3,325 £2 shares in the D. co. which the A. co. held, for £60,991, to be satisfied as to £59,736 by allotment of 29,868, fully paid-up shares of £2 each in the D. co., & the balance of £1,255 in cash or fully paid-up shares at the option of the A. co. It was provided by the agreement that the shares so allotted & the shares in the D. co. already held by the A. co. were to be divided among the shareholders of the A. co. in manner therein mentioned. It was doubtful whether the mode of division was not illegal as interfering with the rights of the shareholders under the memorandum & arts.:—Held: the proposed division of shares, being a matter with which the D. co. had nothing to do, did not, even if illegal, affect the validity of the agreement for sale, & that an interlocutory injunction to prevent the A. co. from carrying the agreement into effect had been properly refused on an undertaking by the A. co. not to divide the shares till after the trial otherwise than in accordance with the rights of the shareholders under the memorandum & arts.—WALL v. LONDON & NORTHERN ASSETS CORPN., [1898] 2 Ch. 469; 87 L. J. Ch. 596; 79 L. T. 249; 47 W. R. 219; 14 T. L. R. 547, C. A.

(b) Account in lieu of Injunction.

181. If justice thereby secured to plaintiff.—Where an undertaking by deft. to keep an account will afford to the ct. ample means of doing justice to pltf., should his legal right be established, the ct. rarely grants the interim injunction. The profits made by deft. are generally no very inadequate compensation to pltf. for the infringement. But should it turn out, as it not unfrequently does, notwithstanding the favourable opinion the ct. may entertain of pltf.'s case, that nevertheless he was not entitled to the injunction, in what way can the ct. compensate deft.? Let this motion for an injunction stand over until after the trial of the action, deft. undertaking to keep an account of all moneys received by him in respect of his having sold carriage wheels constructed upon the principle of pltf.'s invention (per CUR.).—JONES v. PEARCE (1831), 1 Web. Pat. Cas. 121; 2 Coop. temp. Cott. 58; 47 E. R. 1049.

182. —.—(1) An injunction will not be granted where irreparable mischief would ensue.

The legal right of a pltf. ought to be established beyond all possibility of doubt, before the ct. will be justified in granting an injunction which, by stopping extensive works, will do a mischief to deft. that, if pltf. do not succeed can never be repaired (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).

(2) The object of the ct. is to preserve to each party the benefit he is entitled to, until the question of right is tried, & that may be entirely secured by deft. undertaking to keep an account (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—*NEILSON v. 186. —.—The bill was filed to restrain the co. from running certain trains without stopping at the S. station for the purpose of refreshment of passengers, in violation of a contract between pltf. & the co. for that purpose. Upon the motion for the injunction being made, the Vice-Chancellor, before granting it, required pltf. to establish his right at law, the co. undertaking to keep certain accounts. Proceedings were accordingly taken at law, & resulted in favour of pltf. Upon the application for the injunction being thereupon renewed, the co. asked for a case to a ct. of law, upon a question of law which they by inadvertence had omitted to have tried under the former proceedings, & they resisted the injunction being granted in the meantime. The Vice-Chancellor thought the co. entitled to a case, but granted an interim injunction to pltf. Upon appeal the Lord Chancellor discharged that part of the Vice-Chancellor's order which granted an interim injunction, & in lieu thereof required an undertaking from the co. not only to keep the accounts which had been directed in the first instance, but also to pay what might be found due to pltf. for the injury he might sustain by their continuing to run their trains in the manner complained of. A case was accordingly taken at law, & the opinion thereon was in favour of pltf. Pending the proceedings at law pltf.'s interest under the covenant ceased, & the injunction became unnecessary. The ct. on motion by pltf. for the costs of the proceedings at law & in equity, & for a reference to take the accounts which the co. had been ordered to keep, made an order for a reference, but reserved its direction as to the costs, on the ground that they might possibly be affected by the result of the account.—*RIGBY v. Where permission given to continue act.—P. granted permission to W., an adjoining owner, to dig a drain partly on his land, for the purpose of draining a pit on the lands of W. which had been in use for some years, & which it was alleged had created a nuisance:—Held: P., after having granted the permission & lying by so long, was not in a position to obtain an interlocutory injunction restraining such nuisance, unless he could show from time to time, &, with the exception of a small part, which was given up to the landlord, the co. remained in possession of the greater part of the land. Fifty-seven years after disputes arose, & each party gave the other notice to quit such part of the land taken by the co. as each held. The co. then filed a bill, asking for a conveyance of the lands comprised in the award, & to restrain defts. from making a bridge over the railroad:—Held: the mistakes of the mutual agents of the parties acting under the compulsory clauses of the Act of Parliament, could not bind the land or give vitality to an informal award on such a contract, & the co. could not ask for a conveyance of the lands on their securing a perpetual rentcharge of £14 a year to defts., as stated in the award.

In the present action defts., after their undertaking, commenced to make & sell the P. card. Pltf. moved for an interim injunction to restrain them, alleging that the P. card was the same as the M. card:—Held: the P. card was practically the same as the M. card; but, on the balance of convenience, an injunction was not granted, although defts. were ordered to give an undertaking to keep an account.—*THOMSON v. SECT. 2.—AT WHAT STAGE GRANTED.

194. Whether granted after decision—To preserve property pending appeal.—Where a bill has been dismissed & the decree has been enrolled, the ct. has exhausted its jurisdiction in that suit, & will not grant an injunction to preserve the property which was in question in the cause pending an appeal to the House of Lords; & where pltf. is desirous of having the property thus temporarily protected, it is incumbent on him to see that the decree is framed so as to keep alive the jurisdiction pending the appeal.—GALLOWAY v. LONDON CORPN. (No. 2) (1865), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 59; 12 L. T. 623; 11 Jur. N. S. 537; 13 W. R. 933; 46 E. R. 560, L. JJ.

195. —.]—When an action has been altogether dismissed by a Div. Ct. no order can be made under R. S. C., 1875, Ord. 58, r. 16, to stay proceedings pending an appeal; but the Ct. of Appeal will, in a proper case, grant an injunction to restrain any of the parties parting with property till the hearing of the appeal.—WILSON v. CHURCH (1879), 11 Ch. D. 576; 48 L. J. Ch. 690; 27 W. R. 843, C. A.

196. —.]—A decree was made in three suits for the administration of the personal estate of an intestate, directing the usual inquiry as to her next of kin. A certificate was made finding five persons of the name of F., who were resident abroad, to be the next of kin, & an order was made for distribution of the fund in ct. among them. S., who had not been a party to the proceedings, applied by motion to stay the distribution of the fund, alleging herself to be next of kin. The Vice-Chancellor suspended the giving out of the order, & directed his chief clerk to inquire whether S. had made out a prima facie case, & the chief clerk finding that she had not, the Vice-Chancellor directed the order to be given out without prejudice to any independent proceeding by S. Four of the five shares were at once transferred to four of the persons found entitled; the fifth remained in ct. Two of the shares which had been transferred were sold out, & the proceeds received by the vendors. S. then commenced an action, & obtained in it an order granting an injunction to restrain any dealing with the three shares which had not been sold, & directing an inquiry who were the next of kin, & this order was subsequently directed to be taken as made in the three suits as well as in the action. The chief clerk again found the F. family to be the next of kin. The action & a summons to vary the certificate were heard before the Vice-Chancellor, who dismissed the summons & the action, but continued the injunction in the three causes until further order. S. appealed, & the Ct. of Appeal affirmed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor dismissing her bill, but S. being about to appeal to the House of Lords:—Held: as, if S. ultimately succeeded in the House of Lords, her success would be useless unless the fund was protected in the meantime, the injunction ought to be continued pending the appeal.

The principle which underlies all orders for the preservation of property pending litigation is this, that the ultimately successful party in the litigation is to reap the fruits of that litigation, & not obtain merely a barren success (JESSEL, M.R.).—POLINI v. GRAY, STURLA v. FRECCIA (1879), 12 Ch. D. 438; 41 L. T. 173; 28 W. R. 360, C. A.

SECT. 1.—WHEN GRANTED.

SUB-SECT. 1.—MUST BE CAUSE OF ACTION.

198. General rule.]—To call for the exercise of that power [to grant an injunction] it would be necessary to show that there was an actionable wrong well laid, & if the statement only showed a part of that which was necessary to make up a cause of action, that is to say, if special damage was necessary to the maintenance of the action, & that special damage was not shown, a tort in the eye of the law would not be disclosed, the case would not be within those provisions, & no injunction would be granted (LORD HERSCHELL, C.).—WHITE v. MELLIN, [1895] A. C. 154; 64 L. J. Ch. 308; 72 L. T. 334; 59 J. P. 628; 43

PART III. SECT. 6.

197 i. Order does not affect decision in cause.]—Interim injunction had been affirmed on appeal before the hearing of the cause:—Held: that decision was not binding on the trial judge, & did not vest him of the responsibility of deciding the case upon the merits of the hearing.—FRASER v. CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. CO. (1908), 8 W. L. R. 380; 17 Man. L. R. 667; 8 Can. Ry. Cas. 205.—CAN.

PART IV. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 1.

198 i. General rule.]—A pleading on equitable grounds must state facts showing that a ct. of equity would give the relief which the party pleading claims. In an action for obtaining a deed by fraud, it is no answer on equitable grounds, to a plea of Stat. Limitations, that the action was brought within six years after notice to pltf. of the fraud; for that, without showing a title to any other relief, would not entitle pltf. to an injunction in equity.—URQUHART v. MCPHERSON (1877), 3 V. L. R. 65.—AUS.

198 ii. —.]—Declaration for breaking & entering pltf.'s close & cutting & carrying away the grain. Plea, on equitable grounds, that pltf. held the land under an indenture of lease from deft., on the negotiation for & execution of which it was orally agreed between them, & the true agreement was, that deft. should have the right to enter & harvest the crop then in the ground sowed by him: that when the lease was executed a reservation of such right in it was suggested, but omitted on pltf.'s assurance that it was unnecessary, as the agreement between them was well understood, & deft. would be allowed to take the crop; & that the entry, etc., in pursuance of such agreement, was the trespass complained of:—Held: as equity in such a case would decree specific performance, there was ground for a perpetual injunction against this action.—MCGINNESS v. KENNEDY (1869), 29 U. C. R. 93.—CAN.

198 iii. —.]—A.-G. v. FRASER (1878), 3 R. & C. 351.—CAN.

198 iv. —.]—An action claiming an injunction restraining defts. from removing any more top soil from pltf.'s land, or any clay other than that referred to in the agreement, for a mandatory order requiring defts. to restore top soil for damages, reformation of the deed & agreement in question, dismissed without prejudice to any action which pltf. might bring after Apr. 1, 1913, in respect of any claim for breach of agreement respecting top soil, at which time defts.' right under the agreement would expire.—GALLAGHER v. ONTARIO SEWER PIPE CO. (1912), 21 O. W. R. 550, 1002; 3 O. W. N. 742, 1240; 3 D. L. R. 394.—CAN.

198 v. —.]—It was contended that pltf. had a sufficient interest in the soil to entitle him to object to the working of minerals in or under it without his consent:—Held: pltf.'s right being limited to the receipt of rents for the life of his lessor, & there being no evidence that the security of those rents would be in any degree impaired by anything defts. had done or might do, or that the enjoyment of the right vested in pltf. had been or would be interfered with by them, the ct. refused to grant an injunction.—*TITURAM MUKERJI v. Deft. called a meeting of parents of children attending the school, at which several of those present came to an arrangement to withdraw their children from the school. The result of this action was to injure pltf. by reducing her salary, which depended on a capitulation grant. In an action brought by pltf., claiming an injunction & damages:—Held: deft. with other parents withdrew their children from the school, & such withdrawal resulted in loss to pltf.; but the object of the combination was not unlawful, & no unlawful means were used to attain it, & therefore pltf. had no cause of action.—SWEENEY v. COOTE, [1906] 1 I. R. 51, 92, [1907] 1 I. R. 233; 41 I. L. T. 117.—IR.

The promoters of a dog show purported to assign the sole photographic rights in connection with the show. The assignee purported to assign to pltf. the sole press photographic rights at the show. The promoters of the show did not cause any notice to be placed on the tickets of admission or otherwise forbid the taking of photographs at the show. An independent photographer took photographs of the dogs exhibited & sold certain of them to defts., & defts. published the photographs so bought in an illustrated journal. In an action by pltf. for an injunction to restrain them from continuing to do so:—Held: the action would not lie, inasmuch as the promoters of the dog show had, in law, no exclusive right of photographing anything there, & therefore could not assign that right as property. They could have acquired such a right by contract by making conditions as to admission, but they had not done so, & therefore pltf. had failed to make out any cause of action.—*SPORTS & GENERAL PRESS AGENCY, LTD. v. legal right, & now applied for a perpetual injunction:—Held: the small amount of damages occasioned was not a sufficient reason for withholding the aid of the ct., & pltf., having established a clear right both at law & in chancery, was entitled to a perpetual injunction to stay further trespass.—*WRIGHT v. The rule so laid down differs from the rule upon which the decisions are based in English law. 206. —.] — A co. which purchases the land of a riparian owner stands in the same situation as he did with respect to the water rights connected with that land.

A canal co. was established by certain Acts of Parliament. The Acts gave the canal proprietors rights as to taking water from streams within the distance of 2,000 yards, for the purpose of making & maintaining the canal. They purchased a mill on a stream, from which stream they had the right to take water. In this way they became riparian owners. As such they were entitled to the flow of water from brooks & streams running into that stream, subject only to the rights which other riparian owners at the upper part of the stream might lawfully exercise. The directors of a waterworks co. purchased a mill on the upper part of the same stream, & so became riparian owners as the owner of that mill had been. They not only used the water for the purposes & in the manner allowed by law to every riparian owner, but collected it into a permanent reservoir for the supply of an adjacent town, & claimed, as their legal right, such a user of it:—Held: this use of the water by the directors of the waterworks co. was not a reasonable use of the stream, such as could justifiably be made by an upper riparian owner, & the canal proprietors, who were also riparian owners, whose flow of water was thereby affected, were entitled to come into equity, & obtain an injunction to restrain this use of the water.—SWINDON WATERWORKS Co. v. To an action for an injunction to restrain deft. from representing that the business carried on by him was the same as that carried on by pltf. it was objected that pltf. had known for between two & three years before issuing his writ the facts on which he relied:—Held: this delay was no bar to the action.—FULLWOOD v. undertook during the period of his membership to assign to the society his interest present & future in the performing rights of any works which had been or should thereafter be published by him, & invested the society with the sole right to authorise or forbid the public performance of any such works.

In 1916 a firm of music publishers, being members of pltf. society, assigned by deed to the society the performing right of every song the right of performance of which they then possessed or should thereafter acquire, to be held by the society for the period of the assignors' membership. Subsequently a certain song was written, & the copyright in it, together with the right of performance, was assigned by the author to the said firm. Defts., music hall proprietors, permitted this song to be publicly sung in their music hall without the consent of pltf. society, who sued defts. for infringement of their performing rights. Pltfs. claimed an injunction & damages, but they ultimately abandoned their claim for damages:—Held: the interest of pltfs. in the performing rights being equitable only, they were not entitled to obtain a perpetual injunction against an infringement of their rights without joining the legal owners of the copyright as parties to the action.—PERFORMING RIGHT SOCIETY, LTD. v. The fumes & smoke from the gasworks were carried by the prevailing wind across the plantation for a distance of 100 to 200 yards on to pltf.'s premises & had destroyed & injuriously affected them to such an extent that

It was found that deft. was building upon land which was in excess of the share which would come to him on partition, & that on partition pltf. could not be adequately compensated:—Held: pltf. was entitled to a perpetual injunction restraining deft. from proceeding further with the building, & directing that the building, so far as it had proceeded, be pulled down, & prohibiting deft. from building on the land as exclusive owner at any future time.—SHADI v. No other person, qualified to have a letting made to him under the Acts, applied for a letting. Defts. rejected pltf.'s application, & let the cottage to a person not an agricultural labourer. the tops of some of the trees were dying whilst the others were dead. There was no house on pltf.'s property within the affected area. In an action brought by pltf. for an injunction to restrain defts. from carrying on their works so as to cause a nuisance or injury to pltf. or his property:—Held: the fumes & smoke discharged by defts.' gasworks over pltf.'s premises caused a serious, growing & permanent injury to pltf.'s property; the injury being of a continuous nature it was impossible to measure the damage thereby occasioned with any certainty; & pltf. was therefore entitled to the injunction he asked.

If any owner of property, be it a house or a garden, or a park, or anything else, not necessarily a house or structure at all, is so substantially injured in the reasonable enjoyment of his property as that he sustains that which is equivalent to a legal nuisance, he is entitled to an injunction to restrain the continuance of that nuisance (BUCKLEY, L.J.).

It seems to me that this is a case in which the ct. cannot reasonably act upon its discretion & give damages in lieu of an injunction (CHANNEL, J.).—WOOD v. CONWAY CORPN., [1914] 2 Ch. 47; 83 L. J. Ch. 498; 110 L. T. 917; 78 J. P. 249; 12 L. G. R. 571, C. A.

211. —.] — A stream which flows in a permanent defined channel, although it is fed exclusively by rain water running off the surface of the land & ceases to flow during a considerable part of each year, is a watercourse; an owner of land upon its bank is consequently entitled to have the natural flow of the water without sensible diminution or increase, subject to the lawful rights of upper riparian owners & without sensible alteration in its character or quality.

In applying the English law as to watercourses to the circumstances of a very different country, & particularly to a tract of land which is of great value as a petroleum area, & of little value in any other connection, regard must be had to those circumstances in moulding the remedy to be granted to a riparian owner, & in considering whether there has been a sensible diminution or pollution of the water; but the distinction between injuria & damnum is fundamental.

A stream of the above description flowed through lands the whole of which belonged to resps. with the exception of a plot, situated at its mouth, which belonged to applts. Applts.' land was unsuitable for agriculture & was not used for any purpose. Resps. carried on upon their land the business of boring for oil, which was the sole industry of the locality. For the purpose of that business & in order to supply water to other properties which were not riparian, resps. diverted part of the water of the stream, & thereby sensibly diminished the flow of water past applts.' land, they also, without negligence, caused by their works a sensible pollution of the water by oil & salt. Applts. had suffered no pecuniary damage, & the cts. in Trinidad dismissed an action by them for damages & an injunction:—Held: applts.'

rights were being infringed, & they were consequently entitled to relief; under the circumstances of the case there should be declarations as to their rights, but no injunction should issue until resps. had had time to execute works which would enable them to conduct their operations differently; it should be ordered accordingly that, resps. undertaking to pay from time to time any pecuniary damage which the ct. of first instance should find that applts. had suffered, applts. should have liberty to apply to that ct. for an injunction after a period of two years.—STOLLMEYER v. TRINIDAD LAKE PETROLEUM CO., [1918] A. C. 485; 87 L. J. P. C. 77; 118 L. T. 514, P. C.

212. —.] — Resps. & applts. were respectively upper & lower riparian owners of a stream in Trinidad. Both parties carried, on the business of boring for oil. Applts.' proprietary rights & the unpolluted flow of the water in the watercourse had been violated by resps. allowing noxious water from their works to get into the stream, & would continue to be so violated unless the nuisance was stopped. In an action by applt. claiming an injunction & damages:—Held: as the rights of applt. had been violated he was entitled also to an injunction. As, however, an injunction enforceable forthwith would inflict a loss on resps., out of all proportion to applt.'s gain, the operation of the injunction would be suspended for two years in order to give resps. time to abate the nuisance.—STOLLMEYER v. PETROLEUM DEVELOPMENT CO., LTD., [1918] A. C. 498, n.; 87 L. J. P. C. 83; 118 L. T. 518, P. C.

PART IV. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 3.

218 i. Mere inconvenience not enough.] — The fact that a riparian proprietor has recovered nominal damages at law establishing his legal right, does not necessarily entitle him to an injunction to restrain the injury complained of. The exercise of this jurisdiction is discretionary, depending very much on the reality & irreparable nature of the injury complained of, & when no malâ fides exists, on the balance of inconvenience.—GRAHAM v. NORTHERN RY. CO. (1863), 10 Gr. 259.—CAN.

218 ii. —.] — Nauseous & offensive odours & fumes emitted by a pulp mill to the detriment of a neighbouring property, causing to its occupants intolerable inconvenience & rendering it, at times, uninhabitable are a proper subject of restraint; & in such a case, the cts. are not restricted to awarding relief by way of damages, but may grant a perpetual injunction to restrain the manufacturer from continuing or repetition of the nuisance.—CANADA PAPER CO. v. Here is an alleged contract, the measure of damages for the breach of which can be adequately ascertained in an action for the breach of contract (KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J.).

In these cases the question is, will the damages awarded in an action at law afford a sufficient remedy to the party aggrieved, & in this case I clearly think the measure of damages may be adequate to repair the wrong sustained (TURNER, L.J.).—DOLLEFUS v. PICKFORD (1854), 2 W. R. 220, L. JJ.

221. Pauper defendant.]—A pauper deft. had committed various acts of trespass against pltf. which it was sought to restrain by injunction:—Held: the power of recovering damages at law against a pauper did not constitute an adequate remedy & bill for an injunction would consequently lie.—HONGSON v. DUCE (1856), 28 L. T. O. S. 155; 2 Jur. N. S. 1014; 4 W. R. 576.

SECT. 2.—HOW FAR CONSEQUENTIAL EFFECT CONSIDERED.

222. On rights of third parties.]—In granting an injunction this ct. is bound to consider the amount of injury which may be thereby inflicted on strangers to the suit & third parties.

Pltf. filed a bill for an injunction to restrain deft. from setting up or entering into business, on his own account or otherwise, within a specified distance from pltf.'s place of business, & in contravention of a covenant into which he had entered with pltf. to that effect. It appeared that deft. was, after leaving the pltf.'s service as a coach-maker in 1862, employed by W. as his foreman; & that on the occasion of his being so taken into service, viz. in Jan. 1863, W. wrote to pltf., who replied, "deft. would not suit him as a foreman." W. nevertheless engaged him as such. W. was not a party to this suit, which was instituted in Dec. 1863:—Held: the bill must be dismissed; but as deft. had improperly disputed the question of the distance, without costs.

Pltf. knew for some time before he filed this bill that deft. was in his employment, & he was therefore guilty of delay, & by granting the injunction now, I should be doing an injury to a third party, who is innocent (per CUR.).—MAYTHORN v. PALMER (1864), 11 L. T. 261; 28 J. P. 760; 29 J. P. 532; 11 Jur. N. S. 230; 13 W. R. 37.

223. ———.]—(1) The B. co., possessing springs of water of their own, covenanted, upon selling to the A. co. a portion of those springs, to take from the A. co. the entire supply of water they might require for certain specified purposes, & that they would not supply any of the places, their own premises forming part of the district, which the A. co. was authorised to supply by their Act of Parliament. The B. co. afterwards leased a portion of their premises, through which portion their own stream of water ran, thus supplying their lessees with water from this stream:—Held: it could not be decided, in the absence of the lessees of the B. co., whether the supply of water furnished to them by the B. co. could be stopped, but the ct. directed an inquiry as to what damages the A. co. had sustained, & were sustaining, by reason of the B. co. supplying their lessees with water.

(2) A delay of twelve years in making the complaint did not amount to acquiescence, or to an abandonment of pltf.'s rights.—HARTLEPOOL GAS & WATER CO. v. WEST HARTLEPOOL HARBOUR & RY. CO. (1865), 12 L. T. 366, C. A.

224. On collateral rights of parties.]—An injunction will not be refused because it will probably have a consequential effect upon the rights of the parties in another direction.—CROSSLEY & SONS, LTD. v. LIGHTOWLER (1867), 2 Ch. App. 478; 36 L. J. Ch. 584; 16 L. T. 438; 15 W. R. 801, L. C.

228. ———.] — (1) The jurisdiction of the High Ct. of Justice to grant an injunction does not depend on the existence of a right of property requiring protection.

A photographer who had taken a negative likeness of a lady to supply her with copies for money, was restrained from selling or exhibiting copies both on the ground that there was an implied contract not to use the negative for such purposes & also on the ground that such sale or exhibition was a breach of confidence.

considered & treated as a wrong, whether arising from a violation of an unquestionable right or from breach of contract or confidence (NORTH, J.).

Part V.—Mandatory Injunctions.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

231. Exercise of jurisdiction—Particular caution needed.]—Defts. prevented plths. from building a bridge according to a certain plan, whereupon they purchased land upon which to build the abutments, & submitted a new plan to defts.' engineer. No notice having been taken of this new plan, plths. referred it to the county surveyor, & a day was fixed for proceeding on the reference. Defts. did not attend the reference, but built up walls which rendered it impossible for plths. to erect their bridge; whereupon they filed a bill, praying an injunction which would, in effect, be mandatory, & compel defts. to pull down their walls, & withdraw all obstructions to plths.' proceeding in their works.

A ct. of law having decided the legal right in favour of plths., the V.-C. accordingly granted the injunction sought by the bill, with a proviso, that it should be exercised bond fide, & so as not at any time or in any manner to obstruct or interfere with the traffic of the railway.

That injunctions, in substance mandatory, though in form merely prohibitory, have been & may be granted by the ct., is clear. This branch of its jurisdiction may be one not fit to be exercised without particular caution, but certainly it is one fit & necessary under certain circumstances to be exercised. Under what circumstances it should be exercised must be matter for judicial discretion in each several case (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND, CLARENCE & HARTLEPOOL JUNCTION RY. CO. v. CLARENCE RY. CO. (1845), 1 Coll. 507; 3 Ry. & Can. Cas. 605; 4 L. T. O. S. 229; 63 E. R. 520.

233. ———.] — (1) The ct. will not refuse to grant a mandatory injunction to compel the removal of new buildings for the mere reason that the buildings were completed before the bill was filed, or that the damage admits of pecuniary compensation.

(2) The ct. has no more hesitation in granting a mandatory injunction in a proper case than any other injunction.

(3) At one time it was supposed that the ct. would not issue mandatory injunctions at all. At a more recent period, in cases of nuisance, a mandatory injunction was granted under the form of restraining deft. from continuing the notice. The ct. seems to have thought that there was some wonderful virtue in that form, & that extra caution was to be exercised in granting it. To that proposition I can by no means assent. Every injunction requires to be granted with care & caution, & I do not know what is meant by extraordinary caution. Every judge ought to exercise care, & it is not more needed in one case than the other (JESSEL, M.R.).

(4) By that Act [Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27)] the ct. had a jurisdiction to substitute damages where it thought proper. Now this discretion must be a judicial discretion, exercised according to something like a settled rule, & in such a way as to prevent deft. doing a wrongful act, & thinking that he could pay damages for it (JESSEL, M.R.).—SMITH v. They then moved for interim injunctions in the terms of the indorsement on the writ. On appeal against the refusal of the judge in chambers to grant any relief on the motion:—Held: (1) with regard to the approval of the plans by deft. council; as at the time of the hearing of the appeal the plans had in fact been approved, though only on the day when the appeal was opened, no injunction could be granted; (2) with regard to the council's refusal to allow inspection of the plans; an injunction to restrain a refusal to allow inspection was equivalent to a mandatory order to allow inspection, & such an order could not be made on an interlocutory application; (3) with regard to the carrying out of the plans by the other defts.; as pltf. had not joined the A.-G., & had not sued on behalf of themselves & all other ratepayers in the borough, & had not shown any special injury to themselves beyond a mere grievance, they could not succeed without amending their writ, & no leave to amend would be given for the purpose of an interlocutory application.—*DOVER PICTURE PALACE, LTD. & PESSERS v. It appeared to be a question of some nicety whether the lights were ancient lights. On the motion coming on the judge restrained deft. from further building & from permitting the wall which he had erected to remain:—Held: this order was right, as deft. had endeavoured to anticipate the action of the ct. by hurrying on his building & what he had erected ought to be at once pulled down, without regard to the ultimate result of the action.—*DANIEL v. The landlord, without the consent of the tenant, & during his temporary absence, proceeded to make structural alterations in the premises, including (inter alia) the removal of the staircase, the tenant's access to his rooms being now by another staircase, which was a circuitous & less convenient route. On motion for injunction by pltf. the ct. granted a mandatory order against the landlord to reinstate the staircase.

I think it is a case which should be decided at once & therefore I make the order now instead of directing that the motion stand to the hearing (NORTH, J.).—ALLPORT v. SECURITIES CORPN. (1895), 64 L. J. Ch. 491; 72 L. T. 533; 11 T. L. R. 310; 39 Sol. Jo. 362; 13 R. 420.

The ct. will not hesitate to grant a mandatory injunction where it sees that a wrong is being committed; where therefore A., who had been the agent of B., gave notice to the post office to forward to him all letters addressed to him at B.'s office, & had, & had retained for some time, letters forwarded to him which belonged to B., the ct. granted an injunction restraining him from giving such notice to the post office, & from interfering with B.'s opening such letters other than those which related to A.'s private business, subject to an undertaking by B. not to open letters which were addressed to A. at his office, except at two hours in the day, in the morning & afternoon, when the post came in, & when A. should be at liberty to be present.—HERMANN LOOG v. The making a slope of 1 in 30 required an encroachment on the land of a person who obtained an injunction to prevent such encroachment, & the co. thereupon made a bridge with a slope of 1 in 20:—Held: the co. must not have a bridge with a slope of more than 1 in 30, & it was no answer to say that this requisition could not be complied with without stopping the railway.

274 v. —.]—No suit can lie to close doors opened by a person in his own wall, on the ground of a possibility of his committing trespass on the land of pltf., or of his having actually committed such trespass. It will only lie when the opening of the doors is in itself such an irremediable injury that pltf. would not be sufficiently compensated by money damages.—GIB-

It was said, however, that here, although there was a contract, yet, as the injury was small & the works complete, the remedy was only at law. I doubt whether the injury is small. I am disposed to consider it substantial, & I do not think the case one that ought to be left to law on the ground that damages are an adequate remedy. Assuming that there is a complete remedy at law, by mandamus, that does not oust the jurisdiction of a ct. of equity, even where a subject is suing for his individual rights. Here the A.-G. is suing in a matter of public interest, & it is a question whether he is not entitled to elect in which ct. he will sue (ROLT, L.J.).—*A.-G. v. MID-KENT RY. CO. & SOUTH-EASTERN RY. On a bill filed by pltf. against the local board for an injunction:—Held: (1) the local board had no right to make improvements in a way calculated to cause unnecessary injury to pltf.; (2) the evil complained of was one of easy remedy, & the case was not one for pecuniary compensation; (3) a mandatory injunction was granted to prevent defts. from allowing such water to remain dammed up to the injury of pltf.—*MILWARD v. But where upon a balance of testimony it appears that the quantity of water sent on to pltf.'s works will not, in all probability, be substantially diminished in quantity or quality, by the means adopted by defts. with that object, the ct. will not proceed by mandatory injunction, but leave pltf. to their remedy at law, if any.—*EDLESTON v. In house A. there was a window a foot square, 5 feet above the ground, on one side of the gullet, the window in question being the only window of the pantry of house A. The owner of house B., in the lifetime of a tenant for life of A., & with her approval pulled down house B., & built a new house in such a manner as to encroach upon the gullet, & to exclude the light & air from the pantry of house A. After the death of the tenant for life of A., the reversioners filed a bill against the owner of house B. for a mandatory injunction, or, alternatively, for damages for the obstruction of light & air:—Held: the inconvenience was not sufficiently serious to entitle pltf. to relief, either by mandatory injunction, or by an inquiry to assess damages. *SPARLING v. But the obstruction being sufficient to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of the house as a dwelling-house, & the circumstances of the case being such as fairly entitled pltf. to come to a ct. of equity to try whether she had a right to a mandatory injunction or not, the ct. directed an inquiry as to damages, although pltf. failed as to the relief she had sought, & the bill did not pray for damages in lieu of it.—*STANLEY OF ALDERLEY (LADY) v. Defts. so tipped as to give rise to a landslide causing injury to pltf.' buildings. In the course of the action brought by pltf. an order was made by consent for the execution of remedial works, consisting mainly of drainage works to prevent any further slide, the works to be paid for ultimately by the unsuccessful parties. Pltf. succeeded in the action & obtained a declaration that the landslide was caused by the acts of the colliery co., & that the co. were liable to pltf. for all damages sustained or thereafter to be sustained by them by reason of the movement or any recurrence or continuation thereof; a perpetual injunction to restrain deft. co. from any further tipping to the prejudice of pltf.; & an injury as to any damages sustained by pltf. by reason of deft. co.'s acts. Liberty was also granted to pltf. to apply in case of apprehended damage for a mandatory injunction to compel deft. co. to do & execute such works as might be necessary (inter alia) to keep open the remedial works. Part of the remedial works being out of order, pltf. moved in the action for a mandatory injunction to compel defts. to restore the works to order:—Held: although it was not the practice of the ct. to grant a mandatory order for the execution of a series of successive operations, it could & ought to grant a mandatory order compelling the execution of the specific work required to remedy the existing defect in the remedial works.—*KENNARD v. Upon pltf. objecting, deft. gave him notice to quit which would determine his tenancy in Dec.:—Held: the inconvenience of compelling deft. to pull down his building would be greater than any which pltf. could endure by having to seek his remedy in an action, & having the building inflicted upon him in the meantime, & pltf.'s bill for an injunction must be dismissed.

The fact that the injunction in the case was mandatory was not so important as it might sometimes be, because in the present instance the building had not been completed until after objection to its erection had been taken by pltf. . . . A considerable portion of the work was in fact done by defts. after their knowledge that pltf. objected to it; & there only remained the question upon the merits, as to the extent & nature of pltf.'s interest . . . considering the inconvenience of granting the injunction & the inconvenience of not granting it, the consideration in favour of refusing to interfere by injunction greatly preponderated (KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J.).—JACOMB v. over one of the streets of the town:—Held: the verandah had been built after the street had been dedicated & laid out, & it was therefore an unlawful construction; but, as it had been in existence for a great many years, & as no special necessity for its removal was made out, the ct. refused to grant defts. a mandatory injunction against pltf. for its removal, leaving them to enforce their bye-law in such way as they should be advised.—CALDWELL v. 294 iii. —.—Deft. encroached on an abutment of the wall of pltf., which stood on a piece of ground belonging to pltf. The wall divided the properties belonging to the parties. The abutment was on deft.'s side of the wall:—Held: relief by way of injunction was the proper remedy in such a case, for to allow compensation would be to let a trespasser put a value on money's worth on another man's property & deprive him of it against his will.—JETHALAL HIRACHAND v. In 1884 they obtained a further Act of Parliament, which Act expressly referred to certain oyster beds in the lough, the property of the original sole pltf., as equitable tenant for life, & provided that defts. should, during the construction of their works, protect these oyster beds from injury. Between May, 1890, & Jan. 1891, defts. cast a quantity of stones, ballast, & rubbish upon a portion of the ground within the ambit of the oyster beds. They were expressly warned against so doing by pltf. & his lessee, but the present action was not commenced until 1895. It was proved that the expense of removing the deposit & restoring the beds as far as possible to their original state would occasion an expense to defts. considerably out of proportion to any advantage pltf. would derive from such restoration. The trustees of the property, who intervened in the action, having insisted on a mandatory injunction instead of damages:—Held: there was no acquiescence which would deprive pltf. of their right to such relief, & they were entitled erected a skylight on his side, but, instead of a lean-to, so shaped it as to obstruct the access of light to pltf.'s premises more than the agreed lean-to skylight would have done:—Held: the effect of the agreement was to give to each party an easement of light over the other's land; & pltf., having performed the agreement on his part, was entitled to have it enforced on the part of deft. A mandatory injunction was accordingly granted, pltf. being put under a corresponding undertaking.—McMANUS v. COOKE (1887), 35 Ch. D. 681; 56 L. J. Ch. 662; 56 L. T. 900; 51 J. P. 708; 35 W. Before action brought, defts. erected, & eight months prior to the date of the writ they completed the erection of a stable on the strip of land which obstructed pltfs.' right of way. Pltfs. brought an action for a declaration that they were entitled to the right of way, an order requiring defts. to remove the buildings in question, & for an injunction to restrain defts., their servants & agents, from obstructing pltfs. & their tenants, in the exercise of such right of way. Defts. pleaded extinguishment or abandonment before action brought:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to an injunction & 40s. damages, but owing to the fact that defts.' obstructing building had been completed eight months before action, an order for its removal could not be made.—*YOUNG (TRUSTEES OF YOUNG, DECEASED) v. On Dec. 10, 1923, plans for a hotel were approved by the building committee of an urban authority without their attention being drawn to the fact that the proposed building would infringe the sect., & on the faith of that approval the building was commenced on Dec. 16. On May 12, 1924, when a substantial portion had been erected, & after a complaint by an adjoining owner raising the exact point, the urban authority gave a written consent to the hotel being erected beyond the front main wall of the adjoining house. 311. Court will interfere.]—A building was in course of erection at a distance of 30 feet from the windows of a mansion, & injunction was applied for to restrain deft. from proceeding with the erection:—Held: no case for an immediate injunction; but pltf. was put upon terms to try the legal right, deft. undertaking to abate if a verdict should go against him.

The jurisdiction of the ct., being merely to protect the legal right, is never exercised except for that purpose. There must be a legal right before the injunction is granted. Here it is granted in anticipation that that legal right would be invaded, & if the ct. should be of opinion that it is plain & free from doubt that it would be an invasion, it would grant the injunction. If it, on the other hand, saw doubt whether it would injure a property which ought not to be injured by doing that which the party had a right to do, it would not put pltf. upon trying the legal right (per CUR.).—*SMITH v. The council of the borough of B. were bound by a local Act of Parliament effectually to drain the town:—Held: they were not justified in so carrying on their operations for this purpose as to drive away fish, & prevent cattle from drinking of the water of a river at a part seven miles below the town & where it belonged to pltf., & although pltf. had submitted to the injury for nearly four years, trusting to the assurance of the council that they were carrying out a scheme of sewage by which eventually the evil would be removed, he was not precluded on the ground of laches from now applying for an injunction, the rule in such cases being that the mere prospect of injury does not give a right to this relief.—*A.-G. v. Engineers advised that to prevent future landslides a great weight should be placed on the toe of the slope alongside the river, & accordingly the co. which then owned the land on which the slope was dumped over 40,000 tons of slag along the toe. Trees have since grown on the slope, & houses have been built on it, & no further landslide has taken place except for trivial local slips. Defts., the present owners of the land on which the slag is, having recently commenced to work it, the Wenlock Corpn. brought this action to restrain them by injunction from excavating, removing or working the slag so as to create a nuisance to the public or to cause damage to the road:—Held: pltf. had made out no case upon which the ct. ought to grant an injunction to prevent the user by a person of his own property, as it was necessary to show that substantial damage at no remote period would result; but on the evidence the land on which the road was, & the whole of the slope, had come to rest, & the removal of the slag heap would not have the slightest effect on the road if a sufficient buttress to the road which was at the higher level was left.—A.-G. & WENLOCK CORPN. v. 334. —.]—In order to maintain a quia timet action to restrain an apprehended injury pltf. must prove imminent danger of a substantial kind, or that the apprehended injury, if it does come, will be irreparable.

Pltf. was a manufacturer of paper, his mills being situate on the bank of a river, the water of which he used to a large extent in his process of manufacture, for which it was essential that the water should be very pure. Defts., who were alkali manufacturers, were depositing on a piece of land close to the river, & about one mile & a half higher up than pltf.'s mills, a large heap of refuse from their works. It was proved that in the course of a few years a liquid of a very noxious character would flow from the heap, & would continue flowing for forty years or more, & that if this liquid should find its way into the river to any appreciable extent the water would be rendered unfit for pltf.'s manufacture, & his trade would be ruined. Pltf. did not allege that he had as yet sustained any actual injury. Defts. said that they intended to use all proper precautions to prevent the noxious liquid from getting into the river:—Held: it being quite possible by the use of due care to prevent the liquid from flowing into the river, & it being also possible that, before it began to flow from the heap, some method of rendering it innocuous might have been discovered, the action could not be maintained, & must be dismissed with costs. But the dismissal was expressly declared to be without prejudice to the right of pltf. to bring another action hereafter, in case of actual injury or imminent danger.—FLETCHER v. BEALEY (1885), 28 Ch. D. 688; 54 L. J. Ch. 424; 52 L. T. 541; 33 W. R. 745; 1 T. L. R. 233.

335. —.]—It is said by deft. that pltf.'s action is not maintainable unless he can prove imminent peril almost certain to occasion irreparable injury. . . . That if there again occurs such an explosion as occurred in Aug. 1888, it will almost certainly occasion injury to pltf.'s property cannot be doubted, &, although the injury inflicted might admit of repair or be capable of compensation in damages, yet it probably would be far-reaching in its consequences & of a character against which the ct. is bound to afford protection. Is there, then, imminent peril of such a result? . . . The task before me is to inquire whether, making due allowance for occasional carelessness, deft.'s trade is of such a character & is carried on under such circumstances that there is reasonable ground for apprehending a serious accident—that is, an accident producing serious results as likely to occur. . . . The probability [of an accident], to my mind, still constitutes an imminent danger which pltf. is not bound to endure. The injunction must therefore go as asked by pltf. (KEKEWICH, J.).—M'MURRAY v. Where it is certain that the injury will arise, the ct. will at once interfere by injunction. . . . The fact that an action has been brought without a previous application to deft. does not prevent pltf. from getting their costs of the action.

It appears to me that this is a case in which I am bound to interfere by granting an injunction because there is not only a mere possibility that harm may come but the necessary effect of what is being now done is that when the pipes have to be repaired there will be a greater difficulty & greater expense in doing it than at the present time (NORTH, J.).—GOODHART v. On summons by B. under R. S. 348. ———. ———. To prevent repetition.] — An action was brought by inhabitants of houses abutting on an open & unbuilt on area of land situate in the centre of a town, adjoining the market place, & known as Market square, for an injunction to restrain the owner thereof from using, or causing or permitting the same to be used for the purpose of any sports, exhibitions, entertainments, or otherwise whereby a nuisance might be occasioned to the annoyance & injury of pltf's. It appeared that in June, 1889, deft.'s agent licensed S. to use Market square for holding a public show for several days, S. paying £6. The show consisted of a large circular roundabout worked by a steam engine, which engine also worked an organ; a large circular mechanical switchback worked by another steam engine which worked a second organ; a shooting gallery; & a boxing booth. Whilst the show was going on, pltf's complained to deft.'s agent, & a correspondence ensued, which resulted in deft.'s agent declining to give an undertaking, & expressing his intention of allowing persons to use Market square for public shows:—Held: as deft. contended that he had the right to do the thing complained of, & had refused to give an undertaking, the inference as that there would be a repetition of the nuisance; & therefore pltf's were justified in bringing the action, & were entitled to an injunction.—*PHILLIPS v. 350. ———. ———. Denial of threat.] — A telephone co. were using poles erected in 1887, under a licence from a corpn. On Oct. 10, 1910, the corpn. gave the co. notice to remove the poles. Arrangements having been made with the Postmaster-General for an underground telephone service after Jan. 1, 1912, the corpn. desired that the poles should be taken down before Dec. 27, 1911.

If taken down at that date the effect would be that the Postmaster-General would not be liable to pay for the value of the poles. The corpn. claimed a right to remove the poles, but contended that they had not threatened to remove them, & they refused to give any undertaking not to remove the poles:—Held: the corpn. must be restrained by injunction from removing or interfering with the poles.—DICKENS v. NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO., NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO. v. HYTHE CORPN. (1911), 75 J. P. 557.

351. ———. ———.] — If a district council acting under Local Government Act, 1894 (c. 73), s. 26, assert that there is a public right of way over pltf.'s close & threaten & intend to exercise it by their servants or agents an action for a declaration & injunction will lie against them.—*THORNHILL v. 352. ———. ———. Threat by defendant to infringe legal right.] — Injunction granted, on information & bill, upon the ground of public nuisance, to restrain the magistrates of a county from cutting the timbers supporting the roadway of a bridge, which timbers & roadway, at the place proposed to be cut, were within their jurisdiction, but of which the other extremity was within the jurisdiction of a different county.

They have . . . given a distinct notice, a notice quite sufficient for the purpose of maintaining an injunction, that they intend to adopt this course if they have a right to do so. Neither can there be any doubt that if their intention is carried into effect it will occasion a great public nuisance. Why then is the ct. with those two facts so stated on the record not to interfere to prevent the nuisance to the public (LORD COTTENHAM, C.). —A.-G. v. FORBES (1836), 2 My. & Cr. 123; 40 E. Deft. was about to pull down the ruins of this wall, & rebuild it 30 feet high, which he alleged was the original height. Pltf.'s evidence as to the original height was more precise than deft.'s. Deft. said he never intended to build beyond the original height. Pltf. proved that he had threatened to build much beyond 12 feet. An injunction had been obtained, & deft. never moved to dissolve it. At the hearing a decree for a perpetual injunction was granted, without requiring pltf. to try his right at law.—*PORTS v. He denied having used any pumps which were an infringement of the patent, & did not suggest that the owners ought to be parties. It was shown that the ship was fitted up exclusively with pumps which were an infringement of the letters patent, but had been so fitted up before deft., who was not a part owner, had taken command of her; he had nothing to do with putting them on board, & they had never been worked in British waters. An injunction having been granted to restrain the master from using the patented invention:—Held: the injunction was rightly granted, on the ground that deft., being in command of a ship exclusively fitted up with pumps which were an infringement of the letters patent, was intending to use the patented invention.—Aspld. Aspld. (1870), 12 Ch. 361. ———.] — In Aug. 1882, A. set up in B.'s factory four machines of his own make to be taken & paid for if they worked to B.'s satisfaction. They were used till Apr. 1883, when B., being dissatisfied with them, took them down, laid them in his yard, called on A. to take them away, & never used them again. A. did not take them away till Jan. 1885. In Mar. 1887, P., who had obtained a judgment against A. that A.'s machines were an infringement of a patent belonging to him, claimed royalties from B. B. replied that P. could satisfy himself by calling at B.'s mill that B. was using neither P.'s nor A.'s machines, & had no intention of so doing. Further correspondence took place, & B. denied all liability alleging that he had not bought the machines from A. who had set them up on trial & as they did not work well had to take them down, & that B. had not used & was not using any machine which infringed P.'s patent. In Jan. 1888, P. brought his action in the Chancery of the County Palatine against B. for an injunction & an account or damages. B. put in a defence denying infringement & stating that if he ever had used machines infringing the patent such user had been discontinued long before the action, as pltf. knew, & that B. never threatened or intended & did not threaten or intend to use any apparatus infringing the patent:—Held: though B. had infringed the patent, it was not to be inferred from the circumstances that he had any intention to infringe it again, & P. if he had made such inquiry as he ought would have discovered this; there was, therefore, no case for an injunction, & the ct. of the County Palatine having only the old Chancery jurisdiction, damages could not in that case be given.—*PROCTOR v. 362. — Promise to give notice of intention to do act.]—Deft., in 1865, obtained leave to convert a piece of land containing twenty acres into a cemetery. He could not succeed in doing so, & the land remained unaltered. In 1876 an attempt was made to get up a co. for the purpose, but the attempt failed. In the following year pltf., who was owner of a dwelling-house within 100 yards of the nearest part of the land, wrote to deft. to the effect that unless deft. would give an undertaking not to use any part of the land for a cemetery, he should take legal proceedings. Deft. replied to the effect that he had no present intention of converting the land into a cemetery; that he would not give any undertaking not to do so if he found it desirable; but that if he should hereafter wish to use the property in that way, he would give pltf. two months' notice of his intention to do so; & he stated that he should not bury within 100 yards of pltf.'s house without consent. Pltf. thereupon commenced an action, & the judge granted an interlocutory injunction restraining deft. from using, "for burial or for a cemetery," the ground in question, "or any part thereof":—Held: (1) the injunction must be dissolved, for that there was no such threat or intention to use any part of the ground for a cemetery as to warrant the interference of the ct. by injunction, supposing such use to be unlawful; (2) an injunction in the above form could not, in any case, have been supported, for that under Burial Act, 1855 (c. 128), s. 9, a cemetery may come within 100 yards of a house, the only thing prohibited being actual burial within that limit.—*COWLEY (LORD) v. Deft. then delivered a defence; & pltf. moved for judgment in the terms of the statement of claim:—Held: pltf. ought to have accepted the undertaking offered; & on deft.'s giving the undertaking the ct. declined to grant an injunction giving pltf. costs down to the date of the offer & the costs of the day's appearance, & to deft., the other costs subsequent to the offer.—*JENKINS v. The premises of pltf. & deft. were both leaseholds held under the same lessor, who had consented to the erection of deft.'s building:—Held: pltf., having proved his legal right to the light, & that the proposed building would infringe that right, & there being no special circumstances disentitling him to relief, he was entitled to an injunction as to the threatened building & to damages only as to the completed buildings. Qu.: whether the ct. has jurisdiction to give damages in respect of threatened injury, instead of an injunction.—*MARTIN v. 371. — Preserved notwithstanding subsequent repealing Acts.]—(1) A building estate was laid out in lots, which were sold by the owners of the estate to different purchasers, each of whom covenanted with the vendors & with the purchasers of the other lots entitled to the benefit of the covenant not to build a shop on his land, or to use his house as a shop or to carry on any trade therein. The purchaser of one of the lots, who occupied his house as a private residence, brought an action against the purchaser of another lot, who was using his house as a beershop with an "off" licence, to restrain him from breaking his covenant & for damages. Pltf. had known for three years before the action was commenced that deft. was using his house as a beershop, & had himself bought beer at the shop. There was evidence that some of the houses built on other lots had been for some time used as shops notwithstanding the covenant, & that some of the houses near pltf.'s house were occupied, not each by a single tenant, but by two families at weekly rents:—Held: the change in the character of the neighbourhood was not in itself a ground for refusing relief to pltf., as the change was not caused by his conduct, but pltf. had lost the right to enforce his covenant either by injunction or damages, through his acquiescence in the proceedings of deft.

(2) Above Act is applicable to cases where the damage sustained by pltf. is only nominal, as well as to cases where he is entitled to substantial damages.

(3) Although above Act is repealed by Statute

Law Revision & Civil Procedure Act, 1883 (c. 49), s. 3, under sect. 5 the jurisdiction conferred thereby is still in force.

PART VII. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 1.

373 i. Under Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27).]—The Supreme Ct. has the jurisdiction which Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27), gave to the Ct. of Ch., to award damages in lieu of or in addition to an injunction.

Having always been a ct. both of law & of equity, it has always had jurisdiction to do so; but the effect of Supreme Court Acts, 1860 & 1862, was to give to it, if necessary, & to continue in it, the jurisdiction which the Ct. of Ch. had under Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27), at the date of the passing of the Act of 1860.—RYDER v. HALL (1905), 27 N. Z. L. R. 385.—N.Z.

377. ———.]—It is necessary to consider the effect of the Act commonly called Lord Cairns' Act as to the jurisdiction of this ct. It appears to me that the second sect. of that Act gave a new power to the Ct. of Ch. . . . It only arises when the Ct. of Ch. has jurisdiction to grant an injunction. It can only apply to those cases in which the ct. could have granted an injunction, at all events at the time of the filing of the bill; & if the ct. could have granted an injunction it ought to have granted the injunction. Therefore it must apply to cases in which, before the passing of the Act, the ct. would have granted an injunction; & it gives a new power to the ct. purely discretionary to substitute damages in some one or more of the cases in which, before the passing of the Act, this ct. would have granted an injunction (JESSEL, M.R.).—*AYNSLEY v. 378. ——— Where injunction refused.]—(1) In order to justify the ct. in not interfering at the hearing, there must be a much stronger case of acquiescence than is required upon an interlocutory application.

A. being about to erect a building near B.'s house, informed B. of his intention, & pointed out the proposed site of the building. B. having misunderstood A., & mistaken the proposed site for another to which he had no objection, made no further inquiries, & took no steps for nearly a month, by which time A. had almost finished the building; B. then discovered his mistake, & shortly afterwards filed a bill against A. for an injunction & damages, on the ground of obstruction to light & air:—Held: B.'s acquiescence was not sufficient to deprive him of the right to an injunction at the hearing of the cause; but the bill was dismissed on the ground that B. had sustained no substantial injury.

work the patents. No co. having been formed, & the purchasers refusing to carry out the agreement, the vendors brought an action claiming specific performance of the agreement, payment of the £15,000, & damages in addition to specific performance of the whole or any part of the said agreement, & in substitution for specific performance of any part of the agreement of which the ct. might decline to enforce specific performance.

The defence denied the agreement, & pleaded that the formation of a co., to work the patents was a condition precedent to the payment of the money. An order was made under R. S. C., Ord. 34, r. 2, directing the following questions of law to be set down for argument: (a) what was the construction of the letters constituting the alleged agreement; (b) whether pl'tfs. were entitled to any & what relief by way of specific performance, or damages, or both, in respect of such agreement:—Held: under Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), the ct. had complete jurisdiction both in law & in equity; so that, whether the ct. could in a particular case grant specific performance or not, it could give damages, for breach of the agreement.

(2) Under above Act pl'tfs. had first to make out that he was entitled to specific performance before he could get damages at all; now, he might come to the ct. & say, "If you think I am not entitled to specific performance of the whole or any part of the agreement, then give me damages":—Held: on the pleadings pl'tfs. were entitled to some relief, & defts. must pay the costs of the present hearing.—*ELMORE v. Where pltf. has, at the trial, established his statutory right as against a deft. who has erected a building causing a substantial interference with that right, the ct. will not compel him to accept damages or compensation instead of an injunction, especially where deft. has, during the progress of the action, given an undertaking to pull down, if so ordered at the trial.—*GREENWOOD v. B. Principles upon Which Court acts.

(a) Damages in lieu of Injunction.

408. General rule — Continuing nuisance.]—(1) Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27), in conferring upon cts. of equity a jurisdiction to award damages instead of an injunction, has not altered the settled principles upon which those cts. interfered by way of injunction; & in cases of continuing actionable nuisance the jurisdiction so conferred ought only to be exercised under very exceptional circumstances.

It may be stated as a good working rule that if the injury to pltf.'s legal rights is small, & is one which is capable of being estimated in money, & is one which can be adequately compensated by a small money payment, & the case is one in which it would be oppressive to deft. to grant an injunction, damages in substitution for an injunction may be given (A. L. SMITH, L.J.).

(2) The sect. is in the widest possible terms, & I can find no limitation as to its applying only where the injunction sought is mandatory as distinguished from an injunction to prevent a continuing nuisance. . . . I cannot doubt that the Ct. of Ch. has the power in the one case as in the other to award damages in substitution for an injunction (A. L. SMITH, L.J.).—*SHELFER v. Sect. 1.—Jurisdiction to award: Sub-sect. 2, B. (a)

409. —.]—In an action claiming an injunction to restrain the proposed erection of buildings on one side of a narrow passage in the centre of the city of Leeds on the ground that the right of light enjoyed by pltf.'s premises on the other side of the passage would be seriously interfered with, ROMER, J., found that the proposed buildings, if erected, would interfere with pltf.'s lights, but that the injury would not be great, & that he could be adequately compensated by an award of damages. He felt bound, however, in view of the observations of the Lords Justices in Dreyfus v. Peruvian Guano Co., No. 394, ante, to hold, contrary to his own opinion, that, where no injury had been actually caused, but was only contemplated at the date of the writ, there was no jurisdiction under Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27), to grant damages in lieu of an injunction, & he therefore granted an injunction. Defts. appealed, & the Ct. of Appeal, without considering the merits, by a majority affirmed ROMER, J., on the question of jurisdiction. On a further appeal by defts., the House of Lords, by a majority, reversed the Ct. of Appeal, & pltf. having appealed from ROMER, J.'s decision so far as it was a finding that he would be adequately compensated in damages, the House remitted the case to the Ct. of Appeal to be heard on its merits:—Held: on the facts as found by ROMER, J., the case came within the "good working rule" laid down in Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., Meux's Brewery Co. v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., No. 408, ante, namely, that if the injury to pltf.'s legal rights is small; if it can be estimated in money; if it is one which can be adequately compensated by a small money payment; & if the case is one in which it would be oppressive to deft. to grant an injunction, then damages in substitution for an injunction may be given; & that rule was still a guide to the ct. in exercising the discretion given by Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27), & was unaffected by Colls v. Home & Colonial Stores, Ltd., No. 1136, post. The Ct. of Appeal therefore discharged the injunction granted by ROMER, J., & directed an inquiry as to damages.—SLACK v. LEEDS INDUSTRIAL CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD., [1924] 2 Ch. 475; 94 L. J. Ch. 46, C. A.; previous proceedings, sub nom. LEEDS INDUSTRIAL CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. v. SLACK, [1924] A. C. 851.

410. Only in special circumstances.—(1) Where an owner of premises seeks to restrain owners of adjoining premises by prohibitory injunction from interfering with his rights to light & establishes his legal right, he is entitled as of course to an injunction.

Assuming that the jurisdiction to substitute damages in lieu of granting a prohibitory injunction exists, the ct. will only exercise such jurisdiction under special circumstances, e.g. the trifling amount of the damage, & will refuse so to exercise it as in fact to enable the deft to purchase pltf.'s legal right against the latter's will.

(2) Where no wrongful act has been committed, but an injunction is sought to restrain its commission, the Ct. of Appeal has expressed a clear opinion in Dreyfus v. Peruvian Guano Co., No. 394, ante, that Lord Cairn's Act [Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27)] confers no power to give damages in lieu of an injunction (BUCKLEY, J.).

(3) Where a mandatory injunction is asked the Act gives jurisdiction to substitute damages for an injunction (BUCKLEY, J.).

(4) Where the injunction asked for is one to restrain a continuing nuisance, . . . it would seem that there is jurisdiction to award damages instead of an injunction (BUCKLEY, J.).—COWPER v. LAIDLER, [1903] 2 Ch. 337; 72 L. J. Ch. 578; 89 L. T. 469; sub nom. COOPER v. LAIDLER, 51 W. R. 539; 47 Sol. Jo. 548.

415. Award equivalent to compulsory sale of property.—Where substantial damages, as distinguished from some £5 or £10, will be given at law for interference with light, the ct. will interpose by injunction. The ct. will not allow a man to inflict an injury upon his neighbour, & then purchase him out without any Act of Parliament having been obtained for that purpose.

Nor if a person complaining of interference with his light has offered to withdraw his opposition for a fixed sum, will the ct. gather from that fact alone that the damage is not irreparable, & send the case to a jury to assess the exact damage done. Were the ct. to do so, it would be conceding to persons desirous of erecting buildings the existence of an unknown Act of Parliament, with the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, & enabling them to force the sale of pltf.'s right, not at his own valuation, but at the estimate of a jury.—*DENT v. 420. Acquiescence by plaintiff in infringement.—(1) Property was conveyed to certain trustees of a building society. A scheme was laid down for the buildings, with certain regulations applicable

B. (a).

420 i. Acquiescence by plaintiff in infringement.—Appls. had erected a permanent dam for the purpose of generating power by means of a water wheel. The effect of the dam was to raise the water in the stream several feet, & so to flood a few perches of resp.'s land higher up stream. Resp. had for a long period acquiesced in the dam, in the sense of protest, during which time applts.' business, depending on the power supplied, was established. Some years later a new water wheel was erected, & subsequent to that resp. brought an action claiming damages for past injuries & an

to every lot of ground. Each allottee or purchaser from the society entered into restrictive covenants with the trustees, who were the conveying parties to him; & it was covenanted that the trustees should be deemed trustees of the covenants for the benefit of all claiming under conveyances already made by them. Pltfs. & defts. in the suit became allottees or purchasers. Soon after his purchase deft. built a large hotel, on some of the lots he had purchased, & he afterwards on certain other of his lots, & in front of lots which pltfs. had purchased, began erecting stables, with a large "midden," or receptacle for manure, of which the former were completed without formal protest from pltfs., who, however, ultimately filed a bill against deft., praying that they might have the benefit of the covenants entered into by deft., for an injunction against building in violation thereof, & that the buildings already so erected might be pulled down, & damages be accorded to pltfs. The judge made a decree, declaring that the only proper buildings were such as had been approved by the covenantees, directing the demolition of certain portions of the buildings raised, & awarding an injunction to restrain deft. from using the stables otherwise than as general outbuildings:—Held: under the circumstances, the injunction must be dissolved, & the order directing demolition discharged on the ground of acquiescence; & if pltfs. desired to proceed for the purpose of recovering damages, they must amend their bill by making it one on behalf of themselves & all the allottees & making the trustees defts.

(2) Pltf., though barred by acquiescence or otherwise from his remedy by injunction, may obtain damages under Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27), & that even though no action would be maintainable at law by pltf.—EASTWOOD v. LEVER (1863), 4 De G. J. & Sm. 114; 3 New Rep. 232; 33 L. J. Ch. 355; 9 L. T. 615; 28 J. P. 212; 12 W. R. 195; 46 E. R. 859, L. JJ.

421. —.]—The ct. will, in a case where the legal right is alone in question, coupled with facts which amount to a qualified consent & acquiescence, award damages instead of granting an injunction to restrain the proceedings by a railway co. with works which have done & might do further damage to a neighbouring landowner.

Where, therefore, a railway co. had trespassed on pltf.'s land by removing his boundary wall, & were proceeding to build another wall partly on his & partly on their own land, the ct. directed an inquiry in chambers to assess the amount of damage done, having previously refused an application for the removal of the dam:—Held: damages should be given in lieu of an injunction, taking into consideration the acquiescence of resp., the hardship which an injunction would entail upon applts., & the fact that damages were a sufficient redress to the resp.—ELLIS v. RASMUSSEN (1910), 30 N. Z. L. R. 316.—N.Z.

o. Quantum of damage sustained—Impossible to estimate.—A landlord is not entitled to an injunction to prevent the carrying on of a livery & feed stable business in proximity to dwellings occupied by his tenants in a mainly residential locality so as to constitute a nuisance, without proof of injury to the reversion or that one or more of the tenants had left because of the annoyance from the stable, but such injunction may be granted at the suit of any tenant who proves such nuisance. Pltfs. being tenants from month to month only:—Held: it would not be a proper case for awarding damages instead of granting an injunction, as it could not be known how long the tenants might remain, & besides, injuries of the kind in question cannot be fully compensated by damages, & it would be impossible to estimate such damages accurately in every case.—MCKENZIE v. KAYLER (1905), 15 Man. L. R. 660; 1 W. L. R. 290.—CAN.

p. Injury not yet committed.—The injury not having yet been committed:—Held: this was a case in which the ct. might reasonably & properly award damages, instead of an injunction, if it turned out that damages could be awarded.—CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. CO. v. CANADIAN NORTH-ERN RY. CO. (1912), 22 W. L. R. 289;

423. Where benefit results to property.—A building containing ancient lights was pulled down & replaced by another in which the front was set back & a dormer window converted into a skylight:—Held: the right to access of light was not lost.

The right remains where any portion of the light which would have passed over the servient tenement through the old windows passes also through the new windows.

I must consider what the Master of the Rolls has called the materiality of the injury done to pltfs. . . . If there were not that material no question could arise between injunction & damages as alternatives (FRY, J.).

I am also of opinion that a portion of defts.' building actually enures to the benefit of pltfs. . . . although I am not at liberty to hold the injury compensated for by the benefit, yet in deciding the questions of damages or of injunction, I am at liberty to consider it as one element which has to influence my discretion in deciding which of the two alternatives, injunction or damages, I shall adopt (FRY, J.).—*NATIONAL PROVINCIAL PLATE GLASS INSURANCE CO. v. Act, 1873 (c. 66), as before it, a pltf. in an action to restrain an alleged obstruction to ancient lights cannot obtain an injunction unless he proves substantial damage. At the trial of the action, in July, 1890, the judge decided that defts. had practically abated the nuisance to such an extent that it would not be necessary to continue the injunction; but the judge was of opinion that certain moneys ought to be paid by defts. to pltf.s.:—Held: applying the principle that where there is jurisdiction to grant an injunction, damages may be given in lieu for injury, the injunction would not be continued; but there must be judgment against defts. for the moneys found to be due from them to pltf.s. at the trial.—*WARWICK & BIRMINGHAM CANAL NAVIGATION CO. v. In the absence of misconduct a successful pltf. who has not failed wholly on one issue in the action will not, subject to the large discretion of the ct., be deprived of costs because some of his witnesses have been guilty of exaggeration in their evidence.—*LIPMAN v. 435. ———.]—The predecessor in title of pltf. P. sold & conveyed to defts. a piece of land forming part of a site used by them for a pumping station for a sewage farm, the site being so used in pursuance of a scheme sanctioned by the Local Government Board. The grantor knew that the land was required for sewage purposes. By the conveyance there was also granted to defts. the free right of passage & running of water from the piece of land through a drain or watercourse drawn on a plan to the conveyance, defts. covenanting to cleanse, repair, or renew the same so as not to cause a nuisance. Defts. allowed part of the sewage effluent from their sewage farm to flow on to land respectively belonging to & in the occupation of two pltf.s., & into the drain or watercourse referred to, with the result that some damage was done to pltf.s.' land & grass, & a nuisance caused by smells. Defts. justified this by express or implied grant from their vendor, & also under their statutory powers:—Held: on the construction of the deed of conveyance, there was neither an express nor implied grant of a right to discharge sewage effluent on to pltf.s.' land, & an injunction was granted restraining defts. from permitting any sewage effluent to be discharged into the drain or watercourse, but the operation of the injunction was suspended for six months. Pltf.s. were also awarded 40s. damages in respect of each of their claims as to underground flow of sewage & the nuisance.—PHILLIMORE v. WATFORD RURAL COUNCIL, [1913] 2 Ch. 434; 82 L. J. 436. Cessation of wrongful act—Between commencement of proceedings & hearing—Infringement of patent.]—Where pltf. has succeeded in showing that at the filing of the bill he was entitled to an injunction to restrain an infringement of his patent, the ct. will not at the hearing refuse him an inquiry as to damages, under Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27), although the patent has expired pending the litigation.—

439. Reference to chambers.—An author & publisher entered into an agreement in 1894 under which the author was to edit the whole of the plays of Shakespeare, to be called the Temple Shakespeare, & was to write an introduction, notes, & glossary for each play. The publisher was to pay the author a royalty, & the copyright was vested in the publisher. Clause 10 provided: "In the event of a cheaper or other form of edition of any or either of the plays being thought advisable by the publisher, it shall form the subject of an agreement with the author on similar pro rata terms to those embodied herein."

The publication was very successful, & in 1899 a large Temple Shakespeare was produced, the notes & glossary being identical with those in the smaller edition, but illustrations were added ; a royalty was paid to the author upon this edition.

Discussion took place as to the production of a Shakespeare for schools, & the author stated that in Mar. 1901, a definite agreement was made as to the royalty to be paid him in respect of this edition, & denied that he ever failed or neglected or threatened to abandon its production.

The publisher produced a Temple Shakespeare for schools with notes, introduction, & glossary written by a person other than the author. The author applied for an injunction restraining the issue of this edition, or, in the alternative, for damages for breach of the agreement:—Held: there had been an agreement that the author should be paid a royalty on the school Shakespeare, & he had always been ready to perform the work, & the publisher had committed a breach of the agreement of 1894, supplemented by the verbal agreement of 1901 ; it was not a case for an injunction, but there must be a reference to chambers to assess the damages.—GOLLANCZ v. DENT (1908), 88 L. T. 358.

Part VIII.—Effect of Conduct of Parties.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

440. Applicant must come with clean hands.—Where deft. in a suit, founded on charges of misconduct, for an account & a dissolution of the partnership & for an injunction to restrain him from receiving debts, drawing bills, etc., or further interfering in the partnership concern, denied or explained facts of appropriation to his own use of debts received by him from persons indebted to the concern, & alleged that he could not put in his answer to the bill because pltf. had possessed himself of the partnership books, & carried them away from the partnership premises, the ct. would not even grant the injunction, on the ground of pltf. having acted improperly.—LITTLEWOOD v. CALDWELL (1822), 11 Price, 97 ; 147 E. R. 413.

442. —.]—Small instances of bad faith in a pltf., where deft. has an adequate remedy for such breaches of faith in his own hands, will not induce the ct. to dismiss a bill where the result would be to leave pltf. without any adequate remedy ; but the ct. will mark its sense of pltf.'s misconduct by disallowing all costs.—HOLMES v. The ct. will not grant relief by injunction where there has been for a considerable time a violation of the agreement in respect of which relief is sought, both by pltf. & deft.

t. Fraud of applicant.—The owner of an embarrassed estate executed a bond & warrant of attorney, to confess judgment thereon, to his sister, with the intention of having judgment for a large sum entered in her name & proceedings taken so as to secure to himself a portion of the rents of his estate, & protect them from creditors, who were proceeding to get into possession. Afterwards a judgment was entered by the attorney of the obligor, who retained the bond in his possession. No further proceedings were taken on the judgment, since the creditors succeeded in extending the portion of the property sought to be protected from their demands. The judgment was assigned. The assignee proceeded at law against the conusor. An injunction for want of an answer was obtained. On a motion, after answer, to continue the injunction:—Held: though the attempt had proved ineffectual, the

(2) Deft.'s building obstructed in a material degree the access of light & air to old windows in pltf.'s premises:—Held: pltf. was not the less entitled to an injunction because he was himself engaged in erecting a structure which would interfere with the access of light & air to those windows from an opposite direction.

(3) The ct., in addition to requiring the usual undertaking from pltf. to be answerable in damages, prefaced its order for an injunction by a recital that pltf. intended to retain or restore the windows.—*STRAIGHT v. PART VIII. SECT. 2.

449 i. Assertion without active support—Right not thereby kept alive.]—A tenant, who had completed upon the demised premises a building, partly erected by a former tenant through whom he claimed, & which was erected & used by both for trade purposes, held over after the expiration of the lease to the first tenant, & was subsequently granted by his landlord a new lease, with the usual covenant to repair & a proviso that the lessee should have the privilege, at the expiration of the term, of removing any building erected on the demised lands, unless the same should be purchased by the lessor at a price to be fixed by the lessee. The tenant having given a chattel mtge. of a building, the building was about to be sold at public auction, during the term, under a provision in the mtge. The landlord, hearing of it, went to the place advertised, where he was informed that the wife of the tenant was going to buy in the building at the auction. Satisfied with this he went away before the sale, making no objection to it & taking no steps to warn bidders of any claim that the building had become part of the freehold, & had passed to him as such; but, on the contrary, giving the bailiff conducting the sale a distress warrant, under which the landlord was to be paid a portion of the proceeds of the sale:—Held: as against a purchaser ignorant of the landlord's rights, the landlord was estopped from claiming the building as a part of the freehold, & from asserting any right to restrain the removal during the term.—GRAY v. MACLENNAN (1886), 3 Man. L. R. 337.—CAN.

450. General rule—Promptitude essential to relief—Unless delay explained.]—Injunction to restrain the sailing of a ship, upon the application of a part-owner, refused; where the ship was intended to sail the next day, & it did not appear by the affidavit filed in support of the motion that there were any circumstances to account for pltf.'s delay in applying.—CHRISTIE v. CRAIG (1817), 2 Mer. 137; 35 E. R. 892, L. C.

451. ———.]—An action was commenced at law by a surveyor against a railway co., to recover a balance due to him for services performed. Payments had been made on account. Three months after the action was at issue, the co. filed their bill, praying discovery & an injunction, on the ground that, from the complicity & mutuality of the accounts, they ought to be taken under the direction of a ct. of equity. On motion by the co. for an injunction to restrain the action:—Held: this was not a case in which a ct. of equity will exercise the jurisdiction which it assumes in matters of account concurrently with the cts. of law; & no precise rule existed as to the particular cases in which it would exercise such jurisdiction.

The ct. will in all cases be influenced by any unexplained delay on the part of pltf. in equity.

It would, be a matter of reproach to this ct., if, in a case of concurrent jurisdiction, a party, having proceeded at law up to the period of trial, should be restrained by injunction from trying his action upon the application of his opponent, who, during that period, without any adequate excuse, permitted him so to proceed without any application to this ct. (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—SOUTH EASTERN RY. CO. v. MARTIN (1848), 5 Ry. & Can. Cas. 478; 1 H. & Tw. 69; 18 L. J. Ch. 103; 12 L. T. O. S. 345; 13 Jur. 1; 47 E. R. 1330, L. C.

Delay unaccounted for will be a bar to pltf. obtaining the festinum remedium by way of injunction.—KING EDWARD'S SCHOOL v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. CO. (1849), 13 L. T. O. S. 203.

453. ———.]—Acquiescence by the party complainant, in the erection of works, alleged guilty of great delay in applying to the ct. for an injunction to restrain the sale of lands under an execution at law, yet a sufficient case having been made out for an inquiry, the ct. granted the writ on an interlocutory motion; pltf. undertaking to proceed to an examination of witnesses within one month after answer filed & to the hearing of the cause forthwith thereafter, paying the costs at law incurred by reason of postponing the sale, & paying interest from the time the sale was to have taken place until the time of making the decree in the cause, in the event of the sale failing to realise enough to pay the full amount of the claim under the execution.—CANADA PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY v. BANK OF UPPER CANADA (1863), 10 Gr. 203.—CAN.

453 i. ———.]—In an action to rescind, on account of alleged misrepresentations, a contract for the purchase of a business by pltf. from defts., pltf. obtained an interim injunction restraining defts. from proceeding upon a mtge. which pltf.

to be in violation of an Act of Parliament, may, before the legal question has been tried, prevent the ct. from granting an injunction, which would indirectly have the effect of compelling the removal of the part of works already built; although, in the same case, the ct. may, pending the trial at law restrain the further proceedings with the works.—A.-G. v. MANCHESTER & LEEDS RY. CO. (1838), 1 Ry. & Can. Cas. 436.

454. ———.] — (1) The ct. will only grant an injunction where the legal right has been established; thus, where a railway co. charged an average rate of carriage upon packages containing smaller parcels, & upon the carriage of goods passing along deft.'s line & the line of another co., the ct. would not grant an injunction to restrain the railway co. from making such charges until their illegality had been established by trial at law.

(2) Where pl'tfs. had allowed six months to elapse from the time of filing their bill before moving for a special injunction that was held to be such a delay as amounted to an admission by pl'tfs. that there was no such urgency in their case as to call for the extraordinary interposition of the ct. by injunction.—*PICKFORD v. 457. ———.] — There is always greater danger in extending the common injunction to stay the trial than in letting the trial go on; for where the recovery of money is the object of the action, the delay may be fatal to pl'tf.'s at law ultimate recovery of his demand, should he prove successful. The ct., therefore, will require, on the part of pl'tf. in equity seeking to stay the trial, a great degree of promptness in bringing forward his equitable case.—M'CLURE v. RIPLEY (1849), 13 L. T. On Nov. 15, 1894, they commenced the present action, & moved for an interlocutory injunction. For the purposes of the motion defts. admitted infringement, but they alleged that pl'tfs. knew as early as Jan. 1893, that defts. were infringing, & that in the interval a considerable trade on the part of defts. had grown up. Pl'tfs. did not contradict this by evidence, & their first complaint was made on Oct. 11, 1894. They alleged that they were put in a difficult position because there were numerous infringers. Defts. offered to pay into ct. a sum sufficient to meet the royalties until the trial, & to keep an account:—Held: under the circumstances of the case an injunction ought not to be granted.—NORTH BRITISH RUBBER CO., LTD. v. GORMULLY & JEFFERY MANUFACTURING CO. (1894), 12 R. P. C. 17.

468. ———.] — Pl'tfs. in May, 1899, commenced an action for infringement of patents & moved for an interim injunction. The ownership of the patents had been the subject of litigation in Germany, but in Oct. 1898, judgment was given against R. in favour of the right of pl'tfs. to an assignment from him of the patents, & an appeal from that judgment was disposed of in Jan. 1899. T., one of the defts., claimed the right to work the invention under a licence granted by R., & he had so worked since 1894, but, as alleged by pl'tfs., with notice of their title:—Held: assuming that had given as security for the purchase price of the business sold:—Held: as pl'tfs. did not show a probability of success in their attempt to rescind the contract, & as they appeared in effect to have elected to affirm it after knowledge of the facts upon which they now relied, & as there had been delay on their part, it was not a case for the exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction of the ct.; & a motion to continue the injunction was refused.—*BOOTH v. Defendants' exercise of legal right in illegal way—Expenditure of public money.]—Comrs. under an Act for the better paving & lighting, etc., the borough of Plymouth were empowered to levy rates, & to apply them to certain specified purposes, & "in & for carrying the intents & purposes of the Act into full & complete execution in other respects":—Held: (1) this did not authorise the comrs. in expending the rates in payment of the expenses of an application to Parliament for increased powers; the purposes of the Act were public, & the A.-G. might proceed to restrain an illegal application of the rates; (2) the case was distinguishable from those in which there was a legal right to be tried, & an injunction would be granted, though there had been considerable delay in applying to the ct. But if an earlier application to the ct. might have been made, & the misapplication of the trust funds have been thereby prevented, the ct., at the hearing of the cause, although it directed the comrs. to replace the trust funds, could not compel them to pay the costs of the suit.—A.-G. v. Pltf. was also seised of a mill upon the stream. The quantity of sewage matter thrown into the stream was greatly increased, the population of the town having increased nearly one-half, & the extent of sewers from 250 yards in 1848, to 10,500 yards in 1855; & besides other evidence of that, it appeared that sheep could no longer be washed there, that the fish were all dead, & that the exhalations were noisome. Pltf. had been in correspondence with the board on the subject of remedying the nuisance until Sept. 19, 1855, which was the date of the last communication in which they held out hopes of doing so. The bill & information was filed on Jan. 15, 1856:—Held: there was no such laches on the part of pltf. as to prevent him from having relief on an interlocutory application.—A.-G. v. 471. Delay until injury serious.]—A road was altered in 1855 in a manner which pltf. considered likely to retard the escape of water in time of flood, & thus to aggravate the mischief done by floods to pltf.'s property, & especially to do him serious damage on the occurrence of great floods such as might be expected every twenty or thirty years. While the works were in progress, in Feb. 1855, pltf. threatened to take proceedings to stop them. After their completion slight floods occurred in 1855 & 1856 without doing serious mischief, & in 1857 a great flood occurred; shortly after which, in Dec. 1857, pltf. filed a bill to have the road restored to its condition before 1855, & to have compensation for the damage done by the flood of 1857:—Held: (1) the fact of no serious damage being done in the interval did not excuse pltf.'s delay, & he was not entitled to have the bill retained pending a trial; the bill accordingly dismissed with costs, without prejudice to any proceedings at law. (2) Semble: the Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27), does not extend the jurisdiction of the ct. to cases where there is a plain common law remedy, & where the ct. would not have interfered before that statute.—WICKS v. 472. Delay while injury prospective.]—The E. co. was registered in 1886 to purchase & work the S. telephone. In Feb. 1887, they wrote to the U. co., stating that they intended to manufacture & sell the S. telephone, & inviting the U. co. to inspect the S. telephone & challenging the U. co. to contest the right of the E. co. to manufacture & sell the same. The E. co. took no notice of this letter, but in Mar. 1888, the U. co. commenced an action against the E. co. for infringing their patents, & moved for an interlocutory injunction. The E. co. resisted the motion on the ground of the delay of the U. co. in taking proceedings. The U. co. alleged that they had been advised by their solrs. not to bring any action until they found that the E. co. had a substantial capital, & were selling the S. telephones:—Held: there had been no such delay on the part of pltf. as to disentitle them to an interlocutory injunction.—UNITED TELEPHONE CO. v. In the following year the purchaser conveyed the hereditaments & appurtenances to a person since dead, testator took & accepted the conveyances without notice or knowledge of the covenant other than such constructive notice, if any, as he might be deemed to have had by reason of the deed of 1867 being a title deed of the premises. In 1869 testator rebuilt the hereditaments & erected on the premises a hotel, part of which stood within 10 feet of the roadway or viaduct of pltf., & he demised the said hotel & premises for fifty years upon a certain rent to a woman, who assigned the lease to the second deft. F. A covenant was contained in the lease to the effect that the lessee should not make any alteration in the premises without the lessor's consent, in writing but neither the lessee nor defts. had any notice of the covenant in the conveyance of 1867 other than such constructive notice, if any, as before mentioned in the case of testator. In 1881 deft. F. increased the height of that part of the erection which was within 10 feet of pltf.'s roadway or viaduct, having previously in consideration for the payment of a sum of money obtained the written authority of deft. B. for doing so. Pltfs. had no knowledge of this erection by deft. B., or the alteration by deft. F., until they were both completed in 1881:—Held: upon a special case, pltfs. were entitled to an injunction to both defts., requiring them to pull down the erections, & deft. F. was not entitled to be indemnified by the deft. Bull.

Pltf. in Nov. following, entered into a contract for the purchase of the same property upon which the deviation had been made, for a sum greater than what had been assessed by the jury, the co. in the meantime continuing their works & embankments. The bill averred that the coal was very conveniently situate with reference to the co.'s iron works, which adjoined thereto; & that the co. had the power, by means of their engines & pits, to drain the beds, & had occasion for a large quantity of coal of that particular description. Demurrer allowed, mainly on ground of laches, the co. having neglected to file their bill until eleven months after they discovered that defts. had ceased to deliver the coal, & were referred by defts. to their solrs. In or about the year 1883 the predecessor in title of S. erected an iron fence separating his land to the south of the road from the roadway. At some time thereafter the land to the north of the road was fenced, & the width of the roadway before the year 1906 had become reduced to between 26 & 27 feet. In 1906 it was alleged that S.

of user over it, & that deft. was not entitled to build upon the land. The ct., however, on account of pltf.'s delay in bringing his suit, declined to grant the mandatory injunction asked for.—MUHAMMAD v. GULAB RAI (1898), 1 L. R. 20 All. 345.—IND.

After two years the ct. considered this evidence too indefinite as to the locality of cutting & as to quantity cut; & the act too old in date to warrant ct. in granting an injunction to restrain further removed the fence bounding the land on the south side of the road nearer to the fence on the north side, thus encroaching on the highway. In 1907 the rural district council called on S. to set back his fence so as to restore a width of 35 feet to the roadway, & on his refusal twice took down the fence, which S. on each occasion re-erected in the same position. In an action by the A.-G., & the rural district council for an injunction to restrain deft. S. from inclosing or encroaching upon the highway or from erecting any fence within 35 feet of the northern boundary of the road:—Held: (1) there had been no encroachment in 1906; (2) in respect of any alleged encroachment in 1883, the lapse of time was sufficient defence to the action by the relator pltfs.; (3) as to the action by the A.-G., no encroachment upon the highway by the fence complained of having been shown, an injunction must be refused, with costs against the relator pltfs.—*A.-G. & GODSTONE RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. Before that date a slate quarry had been opened & worked by the mtgor. on the property; & after that date, but at what time was uncertain, a second quarry was opened & was worked till the commencement of the suit. In 1820 the mtgee. foreclosed the equity of redemption in the term of five hundred years, & took possession of the property. In 1873 pltf., the reversioner on the term of five hundred years, filed a bill to restrain the termor from working the slate quarries during the term, & for an account of profits:—Held: if the quarries had been opened by the termor without the authority of the reversioner, pltf. would have been entitled to the relief prayed, notwithstanding the lapse of time; but the result of the evidence was that both the quarries had been opened by the authority of the reversioner, & that the termor was, therefore, entitled to continue to work them for the remainder of the term.—*ELIAS v. The fleet in the course of time had become offensive & injurious to the health of the town by reason of houses discharging their sewage into it, & the paving comrs. were consequently about to arch over a portion of it, thereby preventing the access of barges to pltf.'s premises. Pltf. thereupon claimed compensation for the injury which would be done to him, but no notice was taken of his application, & he afterwards filed a bill for an injunction, charging serious damage to his trade, & that the fleet had been navigable from time immemorial:—Held: (1) upon the construction of various Acts of Parliament, the fleet was not vested in the comrs., & they had no right to arch it over; (2) pltf. was entitled to an inquiry as to damages in lieu of a mandatory injunction; (3) the fact of pltf. having in the first instance demanded compensation could not be regarded as an acquiescence, the assumption on both sides at the time being that the comrs. were entitled to do what they threatened.—*PENTNEY v. The party is not entitled to the injunction of this ct., for the purpose of preventing these works being carried on, which he by his sanction & conduct has, at least from Jan., until he made his demand in June, encouraged. If it was a question whether the conduct of a party had or had not deprived him of the right of asserting an equity against the existing co., it must be always considered upon which side the danger most preponderates. What the co. are doing, is, taking part of that land under the powers of their Act, which, even if done adversely, will not preclude pltf., if ultimately he establish his right upon the hearing of the cause, from compelling the co. to take the whole of the land under the contract. Even if the evidence was doubtful, & the ct. had no means of coming to any satisfactory conclusion upon it, the granting the injunction would certainly produce irreparable injury to the co., for if it ultimately turn out that pltf. had not this right, to prevent the co. from following up this part of the line of railway is saying, that they must submit to any sacrifice, or suspend their works until they do that which is entirely out of their power. This would be exposing them to loss & injury, far beyond that which they could be compensated for. Pltfs., who had a right of way over the private road, also alleged that the co. were interfering with the road without the performance of the conditions imposed by the railway Act, as preliminary to interfering with the road:—Held: although the co. were working on their own land, pltfs. must be held to have had notice of the intended works of the co., & had by an acquiescence for eighteen months, during which the co. had expended a large sum of money on the works precluded themselves from asking for the interposition of this ct. by injunction.—ILLINGWORTH v. A. purchased from B. the lease of a house, part of an estate agreed to be let to B. upon building leases. There was an open archway under part of the house, which was described as a "gateway" in the ground plan of the house drawn on the lease, & which, when the buildings on the estate were completed in accordance with the plan of the building agreement, formed the only means of access to a mews behind the house. At the time of the purchase, the buildings not being then completed, there were other means of access to the mews. The assignment contained no reservation of a right of way, but the archway was used as an entrance to the mews until the buildings were completed:—Held: A. having stood by & allowed B. to build so as to leave no other access to the mews, could not afterwards dispute the right of way, & injunction granted accordingly.—*DAVIES v. These alterations & some improvements to the garden cost £500 & were known to the mineral agent of the Duchy, who remained passive. The Duchy claimed that the two cottages & land at W. E. & the house & land at W. Z. had been originally erected, entered upon, & used in connection with the mines at W. E. & W. Z. respectively, & were now vested in the Duchy. From 1846 onwards licences & leases had been granted by the Duchy for the working of the two mines, but neither had been in fact worked for years.

Upon an information by the A.-G. to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales claiming declarations of title to the lands & buildings, & an injunction to restrain deft. from asserting any title to the same:—Held: following the principle laid down in Ramsden v. Dyson, No. 528, ante, in regard to the Duchy's claim to the house at W. Z. deft. had established a good equitable defence based on estoppel, the expenditure on the house having been made to the knowledge of the agent to the Duchy & on property which deft. reasonably believed to be her own; & such equitable defence was good against the Crown, therefore in the result deft. had established her title, & the information must be dismissed.—*A.-G. to PRINCE OF WALES v. the party submitting the plan; & that such approval should not be withheld unless for the sake of preserving uniformity of building or other good causes or considerations. On June 23, 1869, deft., who had purchased one plot, began, without submitting a plan, to erect buildings the plan of which would not have been approved had it been submitted. Remonstrances were made & notices served on deft. during July & Aug., & on Sept. 3 vendors filed a bill on behalf of themselves & all other persons entitled to benefit of covenants, except deft., praying for mandatory injunction & damages:—Held: (1) the erection of a temporary hovel on another part of the estate, which had not been interfered with by pl'tfs. was not a waiver of the covenant; (2) the vendors were not bound to obtain the consent of all the parties entitled to the benefit of the covenant, in order to file such a bill. contracted for the purchase of some adjoining plots on which he was commencing to build more houses than were allowed by the deed of covenant, & in a position at variance with the building line therein laid down. The houses so built would overlook pltf.'s grounds somewhat more than if built within the building line. Pltf. claimed an injunction & deft. pleaded that in several other instances, the original vendors, who were trustees under the deed of covenant for all the purchasers, had allowed considerable breaches of the covenants to be committed without interference, that they were therefore disentitled to enforce the covenants against deft., & pltf., as claiming under them, could not be in any better position. It also appeared that pltf.'s own house was built 2 feet in advance of the building line:—Held: as the breaches of covenant allowed by the trustees were committed in relation to other portions of the property, not affecting pltf.'s enjoyment of his plots, they could not be set up against him, & the deviation with regard to his own house was too trifling to affect his right.—*JACKSON v. Road on the north (below called the second S. Estate). The land was coloured pink on the plan on the conveyance, which divided it by lines into eighteen equal sized plots having the odd numbers on the C. Road frontage & the even numbers on the south. The plan also showed another piece of land coloured green, which belonged to S. but was not conveyed. The deed contained a covenant by the society against the erection or user of buildings on the second S. Estate other than as private dwelling houses, professional premises, or lodging houses. S. by the same deed entered into a similar restrictive covenant as regarded the land coloured green. Other parts of the B. M. Estate lying to the west & south-west of the second S. Estate (below called the first S. Estate) had been previously purchased by the society, which later on purchased other land forming part of the B. M. Estate, including the land coloured green (collectively called the third S. Estate). In 1889 the society conveyed a plot on the second S. Estate (No. 11 facing north) & another plot (No. 12 facing south) to G., who in 1912 conveyed them both to deft. The unsold portions of the B. M. Estate were in 1911 conveyed by the successor in title of S. to pltf. In & for some time after 1888 C. Road was a quiet country road with a few houses on either side, & for some distance west of the second S. Estate & along the whole frontage of that estate & of the land coloured green the district was purely residential. From 1888 onwards this character had been seriously altered. On the north side of C. Road there was an almost continuous line of shops opposite the second S. Estate & C. Road itself had become the main shopping district of the place. Many shops had also been built on adjoining parts of the B. M. Estate which had formerly been subject to restrictive covenants, & the covenants in respect of several plots on the second S. Estate had not been enforced, with the result that private houses on them had been turned into shops. Pltf. himself had erected shops on parts of his neighbouring land. In 1912 deft., being desirous of building shops on his plots, applied to pltf. for leave to do so. This was refused except on the terms of deft., paying pltf. £100. On these terms being declined pltf. sued for an injunction to restrain deft. from erecting the shops:—Held: the acts & omissions of pltf. & his predecessors in title, & particularly the non-enforcement of the covenant as to the building on parts of the second S. Estate, prevented the ct. from enforcing the covenant.—SOBEY v. SAINSBURY, [1913] 2 Ch. 513; 83 L. J. Ch. 103; 109 L. T. 393; 57 Sol. Jo. 836.

To deprive pltf. of a legal right at the hearing of the cause, a case of acquiescence must be shown much stronger than such as would be sufficient defence to an interlocutory application by him, & must amount not only to positive licence, but to an implication of an actual grant.—*PATCHING v. Pltf. brought an action for damages & injunction for breach thereof, complaining that defts. greatly interfered with the comfort of the people coming to his shop. The jury found that defts. had been guilty of a breach of the covenant in question, & also that there was such an unreasonable use of the highway as to

c. Fraudulent to insist on legal right.]—Pltf., a married woman, was the owner in fee of a lot of land through which flowed a stream, too small, however, in the natural state for steam-driving purposes. The land had previously been owned by pltf.'s husband, who, both while such owner & afterwards, had assisted as a labourer in constructing a driving dam above pltf.'s lot. Defts.' logs were driven by means of the driving dam which was owned by them, & such user flooded pltf.'s intervals & injured the banks of the stream:—Held: pltf. was not estopped from taking proceedings to restrain further injury to the property & from claiming damages for the injury done; the acquiescence or leave & license by which a person can be deprived of his legal rights, must be of such a nature & given under such circumstances as will make it fraudulent in him to set up these rights against another prejudiced by his acts.—WRIGHT v. MITTEN (1896), 34 N. B. R. 14.—CAN.

During the eighteen years which the nuisance had existed, pltf. had only once complained to defts. about it. 563. Co-plaintiffs—Acquiescence by one—Some co-plaintiffs infants.—Acquiescence by one of several co-pltfs. in the act complained of precludes the interference of the ct. upon an interlocutory application as much as upon decree; & the rule is the same although some of co-pltfs. are infants.

564. Purchaser from shareholder.—(1) An incorporated railway co., having powers within a fixed time to complete a branch line, commenced, but afterwards, by a vote of the proprietary, suspended for a time, the works. Before their powers expired, the works, on a resolution of the shareholders, were resumed, & actively prosecuted. After a lapse of nearly a year, the powers having then expired, & the branch railway still being unfinished, two shareholders, on behalf of themselves & the other shareholders, filed a bill to restrain the further prosecution of the works. On a motion for an injunction:—Held: pltfs., having been aware of the intention to construct the line, & not having applied with diligence, the ct. would not grant the injunction.

(2) A shareholder, who had acquiesced in the recommencement of the works, afterwards sold his shares to a purchaser, who objected to the further prosecution of the works:—Held: the purchaser was bound by the acquiescence of his vendor.—*FHOOKS v. 565. Plaintiff suing in representative capacity—Acquiescence by party represented.—An institution was incorporated by charter & deed of settlement authorising the holding of land in perpetuity, with power to borrow £25,000 on mtge., & to contract, purchase, sell, assure, & generally do all acts which the council should consider necessary, as if the same were done with the assent of the whole body. Money was borrowed under the power, & in the mtge. deeds were inserted powers of sale. The concern was unsuccessful, & a mtgee. proceeded to sell, & a bill was filed by the managing director after a lapse of three years from the date of the mtges. for a declaration that the said mtges. were void by reason of the power of sale being ultra vires, & to restrain the sale. The injunction was granted; & a motion was made by the mtgee. to dissolve the injunction: a similar motion was made by the council, who were defts., on the ground of acquiescence; & that a power of sale is now universal in mtge. deeds:—Held: a power to mortgage does not include a power to give authority to sell; but upon the ground of acquiescence in the case of the mtgee., & of complete power to sell in the case of the council, the injunction must be dissolved on both motions with costs. Semble: acquiescence on the part of any member of a body on behalf of whom pltf. sues will disentitle him to relief.—CLARKE v. ROYAL PANOPTICON (1857), 4 Drew. 26; 27 L. J. Ch. 207; 28 L. T. O. S. 335; 3 Jur. N. S. 178; 5 W. R. 332; 62 E. R. 10.

Though there was nothing expressed on the subject the ct. inferred an engagement on the part of pltf. to employ deft. for a reasonable time & on the part of deft. not to perform elsewhere. Pltf. having, under these circumstances, delayed deft.'s appearance for five months, deft. broke his engagement & went to another theatre:—Held: he had a right so to do, & pltf. was not entitled to an interlocutory injunction to prevent his performing there.—*FECHESTER v. The first two instalments of £500 each were payable at all events, but the payment of the other two of £750 each was contingent on the profits of the business, & in the event of the profits of the business exceeding a certain amount, deft. was to receive further benefits. Pltf's. at the same time engaged deft. to superintend their business, including along with the business sold certain other branches, for five years, at a salary; he undertaking to obey their directions. Within the first year pltf's. agreed with a company to discontinue the news agency business, giving the co. the option of continuing such parts of it as the co. might elect to continue. Pltf's. then directed deft. to discontinue the transmission of news, & deft. refusing to obey, they filed their bill for an injunction to restrain him from transmitting news, which injunction was granted:—Held: as the purchase money was to be ascertained by reference to the profits, there was an implied covenant by pltf's. that the business should be carried on, & as pltf's. had broken his implied covenant, they were not entitled to restrain deft. from breaking any other part of the agreement.—*TELEGRAPH DESPATCH & INTELLIGENCE CO. v. 571. —.]—Certain lots forming part of a building estate, were subject to a restrictive covenant that no building on any lot should be erected or used as a shop, workshop, warehouse, or factory, nor should any trade or manufacture be carried on on any lot. Since 1886 W. carried on the business of a laundryman on one of the lots. In July, 1893, he commenced to build on a lot of which he was the owner, a building adapted solely for the purposes of his business. An owner of other of the lots, thereupon commenced an action to restrain the erection of the building. The evidence showed that all the buildings erected on the lots were private residences, but that in several of them trades, e.g. dressmaking, boot repairing, & washing, had for some time openly been carried on. It also appeared that pltf. had kept cows on some of his lots, & had sold their milk at a shed erected on the lots for their use, that he had discontinued this business in 1886, & that subsequently he had temporarily let a part of these lots to a mason, & permitted him to erect & use a shed thereon for the purposes of his business:—Held: deft. had committed a breach of the covenant; the breach was greater & more serious than any previously committed; having regard to that fact, pltf. was entitled to relief, & accordingly an injunction ought to be granted.—MEREDITH v. WILSON (1893), 69 L. T. 336.

572. —.]—Deft., an actor, agreed with pltf., a theatrical manager, to act & to understudy as a member of pltf.'s co. on tour in America for twenty-five weeks, or longer if required, but not more than forty weeks, subject to certain rules, by one of which no member of the co. was allowed to act at any other theatre without permission. Shortly after the beginning of the tour pltf. produced a play in America, in which deft. was not given a part to act, but was called on to understudy. A week later deft. wrote asking pltf. to cancel the engagement, & this being refused deft. returned to England, & entered into an engagement & acted at a theatre in London. Deft. alleged in his affidavit that pltf. had verbally promised that deft. should perform in certain parts, but had not kept such promise.

On an application for an injunction to restrain deft. from acting at any theatre other than where pltf.'s company played:—Held: the negative stipulation against acting elsewhere could be enforced by injunction, the alleged verbal promise could not, in the absence of any circumstances showing want of good faith on pltf.'s part, be considered in construing the contract, the allotting of parts to deft. was no part of the consideration, pltf. had not failed to carry out his part of the contract, & an injunction ought to be granted.

It is certainly time that the ct. will decline to interfere by injunction where pltf. fails to do that which he has promised to do as part of the contract (WILLS, J.).—GRIMSTON v. CUNINGHAM, [1894] 1 Q. B. 125; 10 T. L. R. 81; 38 Sol. Jo. 143, D. C.

In 1909 a receiver & manager of the co.'s undertaking was appointed in a debenture holder's action; & shortly afterwards an order was made for the compulsory winding up of the co. Thereupon deft. commenced to carry on a business on his own account of the same nature as that which had been carried on by the co. The co. claimed an injunction to restrain the breach of the agreement:—Held: pltf. co., who were seeking equitable relief by way of injunction could not obtain such relief unless they proved that they were ready to perform their part of the bargain; they could not in future give deft. the consideration which he was originally to receive; & the contract had therefore been broken by an act brought about by pltf.'s own default, i.e. the omission to pay debts incurred by them.—MEASURES BROTHERS, LTD. v.

The agreement gave deft. a right of re-entry only for non-payment of rent. Pltf. committed a breach of his covenant & also sent to British trade unions a circular inciting to revolution. Deft. thereupon re-entered & locked pltf. out. F. accepted, received £20 deposit, & wrote regularly for some weeks; then went to Paris, sent an abrupt conclusion of the then current tale in a small quantity of manuscript, refused to proceed with his engagement with S., & entered into another engagement with C. S. thereupon stopped his payments to F., & employed another author to conclude the half finished tale:—Held: under the circumstances S. had behaved reasonably, & not so as to deprive himself of his remedy by injunction.

Under the circumstances . . . I cannot see that pltf. was not perfectly justified in securing the services of some other writer. That is no such breach of agreement on the part of pltf. as to enable deft. to say that he does not come here with clean hands (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—STIFF v. CASSELL (1856), 2 Jur. N. S. 348.

580. —.]—Pltfs., the trustees of a chapel, were the owners in fee of a piece of land, &

deft. was the owner in fee of an adjoining piece of land, which together formed part of an estate that had been laid out for building under a general scheme. The conveyances of the pieces of land respectively contained a covenant that certain stipulations would be observed & performed, one of which stipulations was that "nothing is to be erected within 15 feet of the high road or within 10 feet from any other road, except fences, & those not more than 6 feet high; & no house or part of a house is to be erected at a greater distance than 50 feet from the front building line." Before pltfs.' chapel was erected, a house was built on defts.' land, the front of which was 15 feet from the high road. Afterwards deft. began building a shop on his land in advance of the front of his house. Pltfs. objected on the ground of the covenant, but deft. built his shop & brought forward the walls 7 feet in advance of his house so as to be only 8 feet from the high road. The view of pltfs.' chapel was obstructed by deft.'s shop. Pltfs. claimed an injunction to restrain deft., & damages. It appeared, however, that pltfs.' chapel was in advance of the lines mentioned in the above stipulation in some trifling respects, & that they had violated the stipulation that no house, or part of a house, was to be erected at a greater distance than 50 feet from the front building line, by carrying their chapel to a greater distance than 50 feet from the high road, & by erecting an iron building at the rear of their chapel, so as to occupy the entire space between the chapel & the extent in depth of their ground. Deft. contended that, under the circumstances, pltfs. were not entitled to the relief claimed by them:—Held: the two covenants were essentially different, the one to observe the line of frontage being of a more important, & the other, as to building in the rear, being of a less important, character, & could be treated as a separate covenant; pltfs. were not prevented in equity from enforcing the covenant as to the frontage line, which they themselves had substantially observed; & the injunction claimed must be granted, & deft.'s building removed.—CHITTY v. BRAY (1883), 48 L. T. 860; 47 J. P. 695.

The purchaser of a plot was informed by the vendor in good faith that the original deed was lost or destroyed, & what purported to be a true copy was produced. This copy subsequently proved to be defective. An action was brought by an adjoining owner to restrain deft. from erecting or allowing to remain upon his land certain buildings which contravened the provision as to a building line. The property in respect of which he was entitled to sue had certain erections upon it contravening another building stipulation, which provided that no erection should be built within 4 feet of a boundary fence:—Held: (1) deft. was affected with notice of the building stipulations, for that there was nothing in this case to take it out of the general rule that notice of a deed is notice of its contents; (2) pltf. had only committed a trivial breach of a trivial covenant, & such a breach did not disentitle pltf. from having the building stipulations strictly enforced.—*HOOPER v. See, generally, AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 620 et seq.

586. Injunction against principal—Not extended to servants—In subsequent action.]—Deft. having brought an action against pltf., the original bill was filed, & an injunction obtained. Deft. afterwards commenced actions against the servants of pltf., for acting according to his orders in the same matter which had been the subject of the former suit & of the original bill. Pltf., by supplemental bill, stated those facts & moved an affidavit to extend the injunction to these actions. The motion was refused.—GADD v. WORRALL (1795), 2 Anst. 555; 145 E. R. 965.

Hence, where there was a dispute between pltf. & one of defts. about a weir situate on pltf.'s land, & the other deft. was charged with intending to enter forcibly on the land & destroy the weir:—Held: the last-mentioned deft. could not sustain a demurrer to a bill for injunction on the ground that he had no interest in the subject-matter of the dispute, & was a mere agent acting on the orders of the principal deft.—HEUGH v. ABERGAVENNY (EARL) & DELVES (1874), 23 W. R. 40.

588. Acting as Custom House agent.]—A patent was granted in England for an invention rendering nitro-glycerine less dangerous. Foreigners im-

Resps., acting as Custom House agents for the importers, passed the article through the Custom House, & obtained permission, as required by the Explosives Act, 1875 (c. 17), for landing & storing it in magazines belonging to the importers:—Held: resps. being only Custom House agents for the importers, & not themselves the importers, & having neither possession of nor control over the goods, their acts did not amount to an exercise or user of the patent, & no action could be maintained against them for an infringement of the patent.—*NOBEL'S EXPLOSIVE CO., LTD. v. A house was built upon the land, & in Mar. 1852, it was opened by T. for the sale of beer. In May, 1852, S. gave notice to T. not to carry on the trade of a retailer of beer on the premises. In Sept. 1852, & again in Sept. 1853, T. applied for a public-house licence, & these applications were successfully opposed by S. In Dec. 1853, T. transferred her business to H. In Aug. 1854, a bill was filed by S. against T. & H. to restrain them from carrying on the trade of a retailer of beer & licensed victualler:—Held: S. was not entitled to an injunction against T., who had parted with her interest before the bill was filed; nor against H., so far as the business of a retailer of beer was concerned, by reason of the delay in filing the bill; but an injunction was granted against B. to restrain him from carrying on the trade of a licensed victualler.—*SCARISBRICK v. So also as to an assignee of the underlessee. L. P. Act, 1854 (c. 125), s. 82, to restrain deft. from continuing the nuisance in reference to which pltf. had recovered damage, where deft. had subsequently to the verdict & before pltf.'s application for the injunction, bond fide disposed of his shares in the mine, & had no further interest in, or control over, the works in question.—*MATTHEWS v. 596. ———.]—An agreement by E. to grant a lease to D. provided that "in case of non-performance" of any of the agreements on the part of the tenant, it should be lawful for the landlord to re-enter. The agreement also provided that the lease to be granted should contain certain specified covenants, & all such other covenants & conditions as were contained in the lease under which E. held the property, with such additions as might be necessary & proper in an underlease. The lease to E. contained a proviso for re-entry by his lessor in case the lessee should not "observe, perform, & keep" the covenants. The lease to E. contained a covenant by the lessee not "to affix or permit any outward mark or show of business to be affixed" on the demised premises. D. granted a lease to B. of two of the rooms comprised in the agreement, & the right to use the entrance in common with the other occupiers of the house. B. carried on the business of a tailor under the [name] of H. B. & Co. She put up in the window of one of the rooms a wire blind, which had inscribed on the side of it towards the street, "H. B. & Co. late S., B., & Co.," & also a white roller blind with the inscription on it, "H. B. & Co." She also placed on the iron railings outside the entrance a brass plate with the inscription, "H. B. & Co. late S., B., & Co. tailors." E. commenced an action against D. & B. in respect of the breach. No lease had at this time been executed in pursuance of the agreement. The writ was indorsed with a claim for an injunction to restrain defts. from committing a breach of the agreement; damages for the breach; & to recover possession of the premises comprised in the agreement. By his statement of claim pltf. said that the lease had not been granted to D. "but pltf. has always been & is ready & willing to grant the same":—Held: the claim to an injunction, being founded on the continuance of the agreement, was inconsistent with the claim to recover possession, & pltf. must be taken to have waived the latter claim by stating that he was ready & willing to grant the lease; but an injunction must be granted to restrain B. from breaking the covenant, & the injunction must extend to D. because he had not parted with the possession of the entrance, & had sanctioned the putting up of the blinds.

He [D.] could only be relieved from the burden of the injunction if he had shown . . . that he had parted with his whole interest in that part of the premises which is affected by the injunction (FRY, J.).—EVANS v. DAVIS (1878), 10 Ch. D. 747; 48 L. J. Ch. 223; 39 L. T. 391; 27 W. R. 285.

599. Party added on appeal. —Defts. in a patent action claimed an indemnity against third parties, & obtained an order that the third parties should be at liberty to appear at the trial, & should be bound by the decision of the ct. upon any question as to the indemnity, but not otherwise. At the trial, the judge decided in favour of pltf. on one patent, & against them on another, & directed a set-off of costs, but he made no order against the third parties. Pltf. appealed, & served notice of appeal on defts. & the third parties, & the third parties appeared on the appeal with defts. The appeal was allowed. After judgment pltf. applied for an injunction against the third parties, & for leave to amend by making them defts., & for costs against them:—Held: the ct. had no jurisdiction to grant an injunction against the third parties as if they were defts.—*EDISON & SWAN UNITED ELECTRIC LIGHT CO. v. Deft. in this case was under order of the ct. not to sell certain meadow grass. He nevertheless instructed some auctioneers to sell it. Deft. could not readily be found, so pltf. obtained an ex p. injunction against the auctioneers:—Held: there was jurisdiction to continue that injunction without adding the auctioneers as parties to the action.—HUBBARD v. 606. Foreign ambassador—Where no submission to jurisdiction.]—The ct. will grant an interim injunction to restrain a stakeholder from paying over a fund in medio to the principal possessing the legal interest in it, although that principal is absent, & not amenable to its jurisdiction.

Certain securities were deposited by pltf's. in the Bank of England in the name of the ambassador of a foreign state, in order to secure the performance of a contract between pltf's. & the foreign govt. The ambassador threatened to withdraw the deposit on the ground of an alleged breach of contract by pltf's., which they denied under the circumstances to be such breach:—Held: it was not competent for pltf's. to move against the ambassador; but an interim injunction might be granted against the bank to restrain them from parting with the fund, & under this order, the bank would be protected against any proceedings by the ambassador.—GLADSTONE v. 608. — To restrain removal of property in England.—The ct. has no jurisdiction to prevent a foreign sovereign from removing his property in this country. A foreign sovereign who, for the purpose of obtaining his property, submits to be made a deft. in an action, does not thereby lose his rights.

A foreign sovereign bought in Germany shells made there, but said to be infringements of an English patent. They were brought to this country in order to be put on board a ship of war belonging to the foreign sovereign, & the patentee obtained an injunction against the agents of the foreign sovereign & the persons in whose custody the shells were, restraining them from removing the shells. The foreign sovereign then applied to be & was made a deft. to the suit. An order was then made that notwithstanding the injunction he should be at liberty to remove the shells.—*VAVASSEUR v. Foreigners in this country, as well as British subjects are liable to actions for the injury done by their infringing upon the sole & exclusive right granted by the Crown to patentees of inventions in conformity with the law & constitution of this country; & the powers of the Ct. of Equity, which are founded on the insufficiency of the legal Foreigners resident abroad — Transaction abroad.—A foreign manufacturer, who manufactures abroad & sends by post at their request to a firm in England, articles which infringe an English patent, does not himself infringe the patent, & is not liable to an injunction restraining infringement in an action by the owner of the English patent.

SUB-SECT. 1.—PROOF OF DAMAGE.

613. Where breach of contract.—Where the construction of a contract is clear, & the breach clear, it is not a question of damage; but the mere circumstance of the breach of covenant affords sufficient ground for the ct. to interfere by injunction. Semble: the ct. may so interfere, whether the breach has or has not been actually committed, provided deft. claims & insists on a right to do the act which would constitute such breach.

Defts. demised to pltf. a plot of land, one-half of an adjoining brook, a cotton mill, reservoir & steam engine of 100 horse power on the plot of land, & the use of a weir below the mill, for the purpose of holding up the water of the brook from the weir to the level of the bed of the brook at a bridge above the mill, " & the free use & enjoyment of so much of the stream of water which usually flowed down the brook adjoining the plot of land as should be necessary for effectually supplying with water & working the said steam engine, or any other steam engine of like power & capacity "; & covenanted not to construct any other weir or dam between the weir & bridge, & for quiet enjoyment of the demised premises according to the tenor of the demise. Shortly afterwards defts. erected, a little below the bridge but above pltf.'s mill, a new cotton mill & steam engine, with a reservoir, which drew off water from the brook between pltf.'s reservoir & the bridge, & they discharged the heated water which they had used for their new mill into the brook, whereby on one occasion they raised the temperature of the water, which pltf. had to use for condensing his engine from 57° to 68°. All the engineering witnesses agreed that every additional degree of heat above 41 renders water less fit for condensing purposes. It was also deposed that on another occasion, in consequence of the increased temperature, pltf.'s engine worked " nearly half a stroke per minute less " than the usual rate of twenty-eight strokes per minute.

Upon motion for a decree the ct. granted a perpetual injunction, restraining defts. from discharging heated water, so as to increase the temperature of the water which pltf. used for condensing; being of opinion that the evidence exclusive of that as to the actual diminution in the working of the engine, showed a material interference with the quality of the water to which pltf. was entitled under the demise; & that the question whether such interference was such as to give him a right to damages was one which he was not obliged to try. But so much of the motion as sought to restrain defts. from diverting the water for their new mill was directed to stand over, upon terms of pltf. bringing an action, pltf. having failed to show that he had ever yet been deprived by defts. of the quantity of water necessary for effectually supplying & working his engine, although it appeared from the evidence that he had great reason to fear that he would be so deprived.—*TIPPING v. —.]—The purchaser of a piece of land entered into a covenant with the vendor not to do, or suffer to be done, on the land or any part thereof, anything which should be a nuisance to the owners of the adjoining property:—Held: the word "nuisance" must be restricted to its technical meaning, & the establishment of a national school, though it might be an annoyance, & cause a depreciation of the adjoining property, was not a legal nuisance which would be restrained by the injunction of this ct. as a breach of the covenant.

Although the Ct. of Ch. interferes, when it thinks it right, by way of injunction, to prevent the violation of a covenant, yet, if the violation is so slight, formal & unsubstantial that pltf. can have no ground in conscience to complain of it the ct. will not grant an injunction (BACON, V.-C.).

The ct. in refusing to grant an injunction did so without costs, being satisfied that defts. might have obtained some other site for the schools, where they would have been a less annoyance to the neighbours.—HARRISON v. GOOD (1871), L. R. 11 Eq. 338; 40 L. J. Ch. 294; 24 L. T. 263; 35 J. P. 612; 19 W. R. 346.

617. —.]—It is no defence to an application for an injunction to restrain a breach of covenant to say that the covenantee sustains no damage from the breach, for if the covenantor derives any benefit therefrom the covenantee may reasonably demand a share of it as the price of his consent.

Where, however, an injunction would inflict great injury on deft., & a delay in granting it would cause little or no loss to pltf., the ct. will not grant it on an interlocutory application, but will express its opinion & direct the motion to stand over till the hearing.—WELLS v. ATTENBOROUGH (1871), 24 L. T. 312; 19 W. R. 465.

618. —.]—(1) There is no difference in the right of an owner of land to the ordinary easement of light, whether it is acquired by twenty years' user or by grant from the owner of the servient tenement; & if the grant is accompanied by a covenant for quiet enjoyment of the premises, such covenant does not enlarge the right of the covenantee so as to entitle him to an injunction in equity to restrain an obstruction where the damage is not sufficient to enable him to maintain an action at law. But it is otherwise where the right to light claimed is not the ordinary easement, but a special right created by the covenant; in which case a ct. of equity will grant an injunction without regard to the amount of damage.

(2) Where the ct. was not satisfied from the evidence whether the wall proposed to be built by deft. would or not be a material obstruction to pltf.'s lights, the ct. directed a temporary screen to be erected to the height of the proposed wall, & appointed a surveyor to report on the effect.—*LEECH v. By an agreement between him & a railway co. he agreed to complete his pier at a considerably earlier time than he was bound to do by the Act, & the co. agreed to complete a branch railway to the pier by the same time; but the agreement contained no stipulations as to opening the pier or railway, or as to the terms on which the pier was to be used. The owner of the pier completed it accordingly, but refused to permit the railway co. to use it, except upon terms to which the co. declined to accede. The ct. refused to grant on motion an injunction restraining the owner of the pier from obstructing the use of it by the co. at the statutory tolls.

The ct. ought not to interfere in favour of pltf's. I am unable to view the damage apprehended as irreparable, or as not susceptible of pecuniary compensation, if pltf's. make out their claim to it (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—FURNESS RY. Co. v. SMITH (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 299; 63 E. R. 1076.

Enforcement of personal relationships—Interference with surgeon of hospital.]—Enormous inconvenience would be occasioned if cts. of equity were to enforce the continuance of strictly personal relations when those relations have become irksome, & enforced them under penalty of imprisonment for contempt of ct. That would be too gross an interference with the liberty of the subject, & upon that ground cts. of equity have refused to enforce them. The position of pltf. is twofold. He is a subscriber to the hospital, & so a governor, & that position was not interfered with. He is also a medical officer. It is not necessary to consider whether the appointment constitutes a contract with him or not; but if it does, it creates a purely personal relationship. There is sometimes a confusion between two classes of cases, one class where the parties contribute funds which are laid out on property which all enjoy in common, such as clubs, & the other class where the contract creates a purely personal relationship, such as master & servant. If in the latter class of case the party has suffered any injury, he has a right to damages only. Pltf.'s position as a medical officer being a purely personal one, cts. of equity would not interfere (FRY, L.J.).—*MILLICAN v. —A lease of a plot of moorland was granted to a lessee, who covenanted to bring the same into cultivation within five years from the date of the lease, according to the most approved method of husbandry pursued in the neighbourhood of the premises, & to keep the same in good farming & husbandry-like condition. The former covenant was not performed by the lessee, & thirty years afterwards his assignee converted the land into a place of amusement, & constructed a running path thereon, & charged for admission thereto. The lessor filed the present bill to have the covenants of the lease performed, & for an injunction to restrain deft., the present holder of the lease, from using the land as a place of public amusement: Semble: if there had been a breach of the latter covenant it was not such a one as the ct. would enforce by mandatory injunction.

It is not such a covenant as the ct. would compel the performance of by mandatory injunction. If the ct. were to do so it would be constantly employed in regulating the cultivation of a great part of the country (JESSEL, M.R.).—MUSGRAVE v. HORNER (1874), 31 L. T. 632; 23 W. R. 125.

643. Employment of resident porter.]—The lease of a residential flat, in a block of buildings let in flats to several tenants, contained a covenant by which it was agreed & declared by & between the parties to the lease that the premises were let subject to the regulations made by the lessors with respect to the duties of the resident porter, which were set forth in a schedule thereto. These regulations, in effect, provided that the block of buildings should be in charge of a resident porter appointed by the lessors, who was to act as the servant of the tenants in the block, to be constantly in attendance either by himself or, in his temporary absence, by some trustworthy assistant, & to perform certain services specified by the regulations. The lessors appointed to the situation of resident porter a man who was by avocation a cook. He for the most part employed boys & charwomen to perform his duties as porter, & absented himself from the premises every weekday for several hours for the purpose of acting as chef at a neighbouring club. In an action by the lessee against the lessors for breach of the covenant:—Held: that part of the agreement which provided for the appointment by the lessors of a porter was not divisible from so much of it as provided for the various duties of the porter, & as such a contract would require the constant supervision of the ct. during the existence of the lease, it was not one for which a decree of specific performance could be granted, & the ct. could not grant an injunction to prevent continuance of the breach of the covenant.—*RYAN v. 644. Supply of tape-recording instruments.]—Defts. were a co. incorporated under Cos. Act, 1862 (c. 89), & licensed by the Postmaster-General under Telegraph Act, 1869 (c. 73), s. 5, to establish telegraphs within the limits of their districts, which included the London Stock Exchange, for the purpose of simultaneously transmitting news to their subscribers. This news consisted, amongst other things, of current fluctuations of prices on the Stock Exchange, & was by the permission of the Stock Exchange collected there by defts.' agents & distributed from defts.' offices to the offices of their subscribers by means of tape-recording instruments supplied by defts. Pltf. was not a member of the Stock Exchange & was in the habit of advertising for business. Defts. had entered into three separate contracts with pltf. for which they undertook to supply him with three of their instruments. By the rules of the Stock Exchange its members were not allowed to advertise, & the Stock Exchange having required defts. to cease supplying outside brokers who advertised with the special information collected in the building, defts. disconnected the three instruments from the supply of that class of news.

FORD (1842), 13 Sim. 173; 6 Jur. 843; 60 E. R. 66.

634. Illegal agreement.]—Deft., a duly qualified medical practitioner, agreed with pltf., a medical practitioner not duly qualified but who was described in the agreement as "medical practitioner," to serve pltf. as assistant in his profession as a medical practitioner & not to practise at R. within five years after the close of the engagement. Pltf. applied for an injunction to prevent deft. from practising at R. in breach of this agreement. Deft. showed that pltf. had given various certificates of cause of death which showed that pltf. had attended deceased persons during their last illness & from which it was to be inferred that he attended patients in the way in which a medical practitioner ordinarily attends, & in fact personally acted as an apothecary:—Held: his doing so was made illegal by Apothecaries Act, 1815

(c. 194), s. 14, the agreement therefore was to assist pltf. in carrying on a business which he could not lawfully carry on, & the agreement was illegal & could not be enforced.—DAVIES v. MAKUNA (1885), 29 Ch. D. 596; 54 L. J. Ch. 1148; 53 L. T. 314; 50 J. P. 5; 33 W. R. 668; 1 T. L. R. 420, C. A.

635. Enforcement of personal relationships—Interference with surgeon of hospital.]—Enormous inconvenience would be occasioned if cts. of equity were to enforce the continuance of strictly personal relations when those relations have become irksome, & enforced them under penalty of imprisonment for contempt of ct. That would be too gross an interference with the liberty of the subject, & upon that ground cts. of equity have refused to enforce them. The position of pltf. is twofold. He is a subscriber to the hospital, & so a governor, & that position was not interfered with. He is also a medical officer. It is not necessary to consider whether the appointment constitutes a contract with him or not; but if it does, it creates a purely personal relationship. There is sometimes a confusion between two classes of cases, one class where the parties contribute funds which are laid out on property which all enjoy in common, such as clubs, & the other class where the contract creates a purely personal relationship, such as master & servant. If in the latter class of case the party has suffered any injury, he has a right to damages only. Pltf.'s position as a medical officer being a purely personal one, cts. of equity would not interfere (FRY, L.J.).—MILLICAN v. SULLIVAN (1888), 4 T. L. R. 203, C. A.

636. Covenant against public policy—Drinking fountain with defamatory inscription.]—A contract by a local authority to maintain a drinking fountain, on which there were inscribed defamatory words calculated to hold up a public institution to execration, & to provoke a breach of the peace, is a contract against public policy, & not such a contract as the ct. will enforce by mandatory injunction.—WOODWARD v. BATTERSEA CORPN. (1911), 104 L. T. 51; 75 J. P. 193; 27 T. L. R. 196; 9 L. G. R. 248.

c. Enforcement of rights under special Act—Effect of statute in 1878 it was the Govt. should construct the S. Railway if pltf.'s predecessor in title should defray the costs. It was further provided that, when constructed, the line would be managed & operated on such terms as the Minister for Public Works & pltf.'s predecessor in title should agree upon. In 1879, & after the line had been opened, the portion of the Act of 1878 under which the line was constructed was repealed. In 1890 the Railway Comrs., without consulting pltf., & in opposition to their wish, agreed with another co. to construct a siding with a view to connect the co.'s line with the S. Railway. On an application for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the comrs.

co. from carrying out the agreement:—Held: pltf. had, for valuable consideration, acquired rights in the line, & the agreement was in derogation of these rights, & therefore pltf. were entitled to the injunction asked for.—HAZLETT v. ALLEN (1890), 8 N. Z. L. R. 500.—N.Z.

d. Enforcement of rights against subsequent owners.]—Pltf. under an agreement made in 1888 obtained from a railway co. the exclusive right to maintain & operate lines of telegraph along the roadway of the railway. Defts. subsequently became the assignees to a means assignment from the Govt. of the railway, & at a later from letting the houseboat to other persons:—Held: pltf.'s remedy, if any, lay in damages only. The other tenants are now in actual possession of the houseboat, & in these circumstances, I am unable to grant the injunction (SARGANT, J.).—DEVERELL v. MILNE (1918), 34 T. L. R. 576.

from saying that the co. must not cut off the wires. They may not be compellable to maintain the wires & telephonic apparatus, that is to say, damages might be the only remedy for noncompliance with that part of the agreement; but yet the essence of the agreement is, that the wire & telephonic apparatus, being there, shall be open to the use of pltf.s.; & that seems necessarily to go to the root of the whole matter (KEKEWICH, J.).—KEITH, PROWSE & CO. v. 657. —[By a grant or patent, dated in 1801, the then bishop of Ely having, as the grant stated, "confidence in the probity, fidelity, care, & industry of P.," granted to P., who was a solr., "the office of receiver of all issues, profits, sum & sums of money, arising & issuing" from the possessions of the see, to hold to P. by himself or his sufficient deputy or deputies, to be approved of by the bishop & his successors, for his life. The office of receiver was an ancient office, & had been exercised before the restraining statute of 1 Eliz. c. 19. P. held the office under three successive bishops, during the whole of which time he not only received the rents, but negotiated the renewals of leases, & prepared the leases of the see, & likewise attended all searches for records in the bishop's muniment room, of which he kept a key; for the performance of which acts he received fees & emoluments. It appeared also that his predecessor in office, who had held the office since 1785, had done the same. Upon the accession of A. to the bishopric in 1836, he refused to admit P.'s claim of right to perform these last-mentioned acts; upon which P. filed his bill against the bishop, praying a declaration of the rights in question in his favour, that he might be quieted in the possession of the office, & that the bishop might be restrained by injunction from obstructing pltf. in the exercise of such rights, & from doing acts in contravention of them:—Held: pltf.'s claims were not of such a nature as to induce this ct. to interfere to protect them, without being 655 i. Whether injunction granted.]—The Supreme Ct. directed that pltf. should be at liberty to apply for such relief by way of mandamus injunction or otherwise as he might be advised:—Held: the word "mandamus" should be omitted from the order of the Supreme Ct. as suggesting an order in the nature of an order for specific performance of an agreement for the establishment of personal relations between parties.—MACQUEEN v. FRANKELTON (1909), 8 C. L. R. 673.—AUS.

655 ii. —[The statement of claim alleged that deft., who was entitled under a contract with a colliery co. to the sole rights of certain coal won from the co.'s mine for a period of six years, entered into an agreement with pltf.s. that pltf.s. should take up the selling agency of the coal to be obtained by deft. under his contract with the colliery co. upon certain terms & conditions, amongst others that pltf.s. were to act as deft.'s sole selling agents, & that from the total proceeds derived from the sales of the said coal deft. was to deduct the net price paid by him for the coal to the colliery co. plus 4½d. per ton, the balance to be paid to pltf.s. in payment of their agency fees & expenses. Pltf.s. sought to restrain deft. from dealing with the said coal otherwise than by the agency of pltf.s.

Counsel for deft. demurred to the terms of the statement of claim on the ground that it disclosed no equity against deft.:—Held: the contract against pltf.s. & deft. was not an assignment of deft.'s rights under his contract with the colliery co. but an agreement for personal service, with an implied covenant not to employ any one else, & therefore the injunction should not be granted, the proper remedy being for damages at law.—CANT v. well satisfied (which the ct. was not) that his legal remedy was insufficient to do him complete justice; & the relief sought being analogous to the specific performance of an agreement, the bill must fail, on the ground of want of mutuality, the nature of the duties & services asserted by pltf. being such as preclude the possibility of a decree in this ct. against him, compelling their specific performance.—*PICKERING v. Pltf. being dismissed by defts. from their service, filed his bill for an injunction to restrain defts. from excluding him from the management:—Held: discharging the injunction which had been granted, the contract being of hiring & service was one of which specific performance could not be enforced.—*STOCKER v. 660. —.]—An agreement had been entered into by carriers & a railway co., by which, for certain considerations, certain duties were to be performed by the carriers in loading & unloading goods at the termini of such railway. It was thereby "declared & understood between the parties thereto that it was not the intention of the co. to take such duties into their own hands, unless their interests should appear to them absolutely so to require in consequence of such duties not having been performed satisfactorily by the agents, the carriers, or by the servants under their control." The co. came to a resolution "that the present system of dealing with the goods traffic inside the — & other London stations of the co. was unsatisfactory & that the interests of the co. require that the loading & unloading of the goods traffic in such stations should be performed by the co. themselves":—Held: the ct. would not interfere by injunction to restrain the co. from acting up to their resolution, the agreement involving personal service, & as such being one of which the ct. was not in the habit of granting a decree for specific performance.—*CHAPLIN v. I undertake that . . . you are to benefit to the extent of 50 per cent. of any purses put up for me above the sum of £25 & in other specified ways." In Dec. 1919, deft. declined to employ pltf. any longer. Pltf. now moved in this action for an interim injunction to restrain deft. from entering into any boxing engagement except such as had been, or should be, arranged for him through pltf.:—Held: (1) although an implied negative agreement to employ no one but pltf. for arranging boxing engagements might be inferred from the word "sole," no injunction could be granted in the absence of an independent negative stipulation to that effect; (2) the services to be rendered by pltf. were left so undefined that the agreement lacked mutuality, & for this reason also the ct. should, in its discretion, refuse any injunction.

The authorities support the view that the ct. will not grant an injunction upon such a contract as this (RUSSELL, J.).—MORTIMER v. BECKETT, [1920] 1 Ch. 571; 89 L. J. Ch. 245; 123 L. T. 27; 64 Sol. Jo. 341.

In an action for an injunction to restrain the infant from carrying on a milkman's business within the specified distance:—Held: the contract was binding on the infant, the clause as to the payment of the £200 only binding him to pay the damages actually caused by his breach of contract, & not being a penalty clause in the ordinary sense.—MORRISON, FLEET & Co., LTD. v. permitting a communication with an adjoining mine to continue open, & water to flow through the same, the effect intended being to compel defts. to close the communication.

Pltfs. have a right to insist on their own view of their own interest, & even if the violation of the covenants should be as beneficial to them as has been argued on the other side, they may nevertheless choose to insist on having the terms of the contract strictly obeyed. . . .

If parties come & ask for an injunction ex parte the ct. looks most minutely to the time in which they have permitted the matter complained of to proceed, & will not allow them to obtain an injunction in the absence of the other party, when they have themselves, for some time, acquiesced. It is quite reasonable that that should be so, because the granting of an injunction ex p. is the exercise of a very extraordinary jurisdiction (LANGDALE, M.R.).—MEXBOROUGH (EARL) v. BOWER (1843), 7 Beav. 127; 49 E. R. 1011; on appeal, 2 L. T. O. S. 205, L. C.

The co. did acts in violation of the contract:—Held: it was no answer, upon a bill for a perpetual injunction, to say that the acts proposed would not be injurious, or even to prove that they were beneficial to pltfs.; & the ct., although no evidence was given of any actual damage done, made a decree for a perpetual injunction.—DICKENSON v. MORECRAFT (1863), 33 Beav. 49; 55 E. R. 284.

681. —.] — Where deft. commits a breach of a negative legal covenant after warning, pltf. is "speaking generally" entitled to a mandatory injunction without proving damage. But if deft. proves that no damage has been occasioned & offers undertakings that will effectually prevent any future damage by the continuing breach, & the granting of a mandatory injunction would inflict damage on deft. out of all proportion to the relief given to pltf., the ct. ought to refuse it.

Pltf.'s & deft.'s houses were separated by a narrow passage belonging to pltf. from whom deft. had purchased her house with two second floor windows overlooking the passage. In defiance of a covenant in her conveyance & notwithstanding pltf.'s repeated warnings deft. in converting her house into flats opened a frosted window in the first-floor flat overlooking the passage & immediately opposite pltf.'s lavatory. Pltf. claimed a mandatory injunction & damages. Five months after the writ deft. let the flat on a five years' lease to a tenant, who was not made a party to the action. Pltf. attempted but failed to prove that his house would be depreciated in value. Dft., on the other hand, besides proving that no depreciation whatsoever would be caused, offered at the trial to give any undertakings necessary to prevent the acquisition of an easement, to keep the window frosted, & subject to her tenant's consent, to fasten up the lower part, & merely keep an internal fanlight at the top. Pltf., however, declined to make a new bargain at the trial & pressed for a mandatory injunction:—Held: having regard to all the circumstances, including the absence of damage, the five years' tenancy in a non-party, & deft.'s proposed undertakings which the ct. accepted, it would not be right to grant a mandatory injunction, but it would be sufficient to declare that the opening of the window was a breach of covenant, & to give pltf. 40s. nominal damages & costs for that breach. Dft.'s undertakings would be embodied in the order.—SHARP v. HARRISON, [1922] 1 Ch. 502; 91 L. J. Ch. 442.

D. Public Convenience.

683. General rule.]—(1) A railway co., for the purpose of constructing its line, entered into an agreement with pltf. for the purchase of certain lands belonging to him, & in the conveyance covenanted not to raise "any building or erection" of more than a certain height within a certain distance of pltf.'s property. The agreement contained, after the words "building or erection" the words "except the said railway," but these latter words were not in the conveyance:—Held: although a portion of the viaduct had been already raised within the prohibited limits, its toleration by pltf. did not bind him to tolerate every other infringement of the covenant. The ct. would not refuse to interfere on the ground that the aggrieved party might have already permitted some other infringement of the covenant.

(2) Semble: there may be cases in which the ct. will refuse interference on the sole ground that the damage occasioned by the breach is exceedingly small; but the evidence must put it beyond doubt that such is the case.

Whether there are or may be any cases in which it is so clear that the damages to arise from breach of the covenant would be inappreciable, & in which this ct. would, on that ground alone, refuse its interference, I am not prepared to say. Possibly there may be such a case; but such cases, if such there be, must be free from all possible doubt. It must be clear that there is no appreciable, or, at all events, no substantial damage, before this ct. would, upon the ground of smallness of the damages, withhold its hand from enforcing the execution of the covenant (TURNER, L.J.).

(3) Semble: although the performance of a covenant, which is valid at law, may occasion great loss to the covenantor & serious mischief to the public, & the damage occasioned by its breach may be susceptible of pecuniary compensation, the ct. will not, on those grounds, refuse to exercise its jurisdiction to restrain a breach thereof.—LLOYD v. LONDON, CHATHAM & DOVER RY. CO. (1865), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 568; 6 New Rep. 54; 34 L. J. Ch. 401; 12 L. T. 363; 29 J. P. 743; 11 Jur. N. S. 380; 13 W. R. 698; 46 E. R. 496, L. JJ.

that, if they had been, it was for the public convenience they should be there, & that pltf. was precluded by his acquiescence from now obtaining a mandatory injunction to remove:—Held: by the Act defts. had made a statutory contract not to do what the ct. was of opinion they had done, so that the question of public convenience did not apply, & the acquiescence of pltf. was not such as would preclude him from obtaining the injunction, but the ct. would grant one, compelling defts. to remove the buildings as prayed.

Defts., who had completed their building . . . cannot say that by reason of anything done by pltf. they have expended money because they had been warned what the construction put upon the Act of Parliament by pltf. was (CHITTY, J.).—PRICE v. BALA & FESTINOG RY. CO. (1884), 50 L. T. 787.

If pltf., who has obtained an injunction, misrepresents to the public what has been done by the ct., & deft., to correct that misrepresentation, does an act, which, in strictness, is a breach of the injunction, the ct. will not entertain any complaint against him on the part of pltf., for such a breach.

the same price as pltf.'s publication, & with the same title, altered only by prefixing to it the word "Daily," was advertised by deft. as about to be published by him at his office. Pltf. filed his bill for an injunction, which was granted; &, on pltf.'s undertaking to abide by the order of the ct. as to damages, & to begin an action against deft. within one week, the order was confirmed.—INGRAM v. Shortly afterwards T. threatened to sell the judgment debt at the periodical sale of M. & Co., which would necessarily involve by the advertisements, etc., the publication of J.'s indebtedness. By the schedule to the Act a toll of 6d. was payable for every horse drawing a carriage. Deft. tendered for the tolls on the footing, as he alleged, of the above provisions; & the comrs., by lease demised to deft., at an annual rent, the tolls which were or could then be demanded & taken, subject to all statutory restrictions & exemptions, & so as such tolls to be taken during the demise should not be increased beyond the tolls then levied. At the date of the lease one toll only was demanded in respect of a hackney carriage passing over the bridge with passengers & returning with the same passengers or without passengers on the same day, & no toll was demanded in respect of a hackney carriage passing without passengers. Deft. proposed to charge a toll in the case of a carriage plying for hire every time it crossed the bridge. Thereupon the comrs. brought an action claiming an injunction to restrain him from so doing. Deft. counter-claimed that the lease might be rectified on the ground that it did not give effect to the contract between the comrs. & himself by their acceptance of his tender for the tolls:—Held: the proposed increase of the tolls was not permissible, having regard to the terms of the lease.—CONWAY BRIDGE COMRS. v. A. on the other hand, agreed to supply the patentee with all such quantities of the first-mentioned article as should be required, & to purchase from him all the particular product. Upon a bill filed by A. to have this agreement specifically performed:—Held: the ct. had no jurisdiction to compel performance by A. of the positive part of the agreement, & it would not therefore interfere by injunction to restrain the patentee from buying from or selling to other parties than A.—*HILLS v. 703. Entire contract not specifically enforceable.]—Where an agreement is so infirm that the ct. can decree no substantial performance of it, there the parties will be left to their legal remedies; but where there is a clear negative agreement on the one side the ct. will not refrain from enforcing that agreement by injunction, because there may be some positive stipulations which the ct. cannot enforce against pltf.

There is a different rule with respect to injunctions from that upon which the ct. acts with respect to specific performance. Injunction will be granted in cases where there can be no specific performance.

The rule respecting injunctions cannot be confined to cases where there is a positive agreement not enforced against pltf. If there is such infirmity in the agreement that the ct. cannot perform the whole, it may decline to interfere. But where there is a consideration paid for a negative agreement, or an agreement prohibiting certain acts, the ct. will interfere by injunction (LORD COTTENHAM, C.)—*DIETRICHSEN v. 707. ———.]—Where a contract contains both a negative & an affirmative agreement the ct. will interfere by injunction to restrain a breach of the negative portion of the contract, without regard to the question whether or not the whole contract is capable of being specifically enforced.

C., having broken his contract by selling all his fish refuse to a third party:—Held: an injunction must be awarded to restrain such a breach.—DONNELL v. BENNETT (1883), 22 Ch. D. 835; 52 L. J. 709. ————.]—An agreement was entered into between K. & P. that K. should take out a patent for purifying paraffin & assign it to P.; that P. thereupon would work it for fourteen years, if it could be so long worked at a profit; would not purify paraffin by any other process, & would pay to K. a royalty upon all purified paraffin sold; that P. would keep accurate account of all paraffin purified according to the patent, render them half yearly & verify them, & that the provisions of this agreement & all other provisions usual & proper in such deeds should be incorporated in the deed of assignment of the patent, such deed to be prepared by counsel to be agreed on by the solrs. of the parties. The patent was taken out, & P. commenced working under it, but shortly afterwards abandoned the use of the process, alleging that it could not be worked at a profit, & refused to pay any royalty. K. thereupon brought an action at law for royalties & recovered judgment. Pending this action, P. gave notice to determine the agreement because the invention could not be worked to a profit. K., after obtaining judgment, filed his bill, asking for an account of subsequent royalties, an injunction to restrain the deft. from purifying paraffin under any other process, & for a reference to chambers to settle a proper deed of assignment, or if the ct. should hold the agreement to have been determined, then for relief against deft. as an infringer of the patent:—Held: in a case of this nature it was in the discretion of the ct. whether it would direct an account or leave the parties to their remedy at law, & in the present case the account being only a part of an agreement which the ct. could not wholly enforce, pltf. ought to be left to his remedy at law, & for the same reason the execution of the assignment ought not to be decreed.

The ct. cannot enforce the agreement in all its parts, & it is not certainly according to its usual course to enforce agreements partially. It has done so, indeed, in some cases, of what may be termed negative covenants, but those have been cases in which the negative covenant has formed a distinct branch of the agreement (TURNER, L.J.).—KERNOT v. POTTER (1862), 3 De G. F. & J. 447; 45 E. R. 951, L. J.J.

RYMAN (1868), 17 L. T. 486; 16 W. R. 302.

711. ————]—Where injunction merely incidental to principal relief.]—The ct. will not compel specific performance of an agreement by a co. to employ pltf. as their broker; & the contract being at an end, that which is merely an adjunct to the principal relief sought, viz., an injunction to restrain the co. from advertising, in breach of a stipulation contained in the agreement, the name of any other person as their broker, will not be granted.—BRETT v. EAST INDIA & LONDON SHIPPING CO., LTD. (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 404; 3 New Rep. 688; 10 L. T. 187; 12 W. R. 596; 71 E. R. 520.

B. Principles on Which Court acts.

712. Injunction dependent on plaintiff's performance.]—The ground upon which the ct. goes, in enforcing, by injunction, a negative term in an agreement, the positive terms in which cannot be enforced by decree for specific performance is, that the injunction is dependent upon pltf.'s performing his part of the contract, & will be dissolved upon his failing to do so.—STOCKER v. WEDDERBURN (1857), 3 K. & J. 393; 26 L. J. Ch. 713; 30 L. T. O. S. 71; 5 W. R. 671; 69 E. R. 1162.

713. Substance of stipulation to be considered.]—In considering whether to grant or refuse an injunction to restrain a breach of a particular clause of an agreement, the ct. will look to the substance of the act to be performed, & not merely to the presence or absence of negative words.

A lease of a line of railway contained an agreement by the lessee co. to carry over it all traffic between certain places, & to pay the lessor co. one-half the receipts in respect of such traffic. The lease contained other provisions on which no relief could have been obtained in equity, & it contained no negative stipulation restricting the lessee co. from carrying the traffic in question over other lines. On demurrer to a bill by the lessor co., alleging that the lessee co. were carrying the traffic mentioned in the agreement over other lines of their own, & praying for an injunction to restrain them:—Held: relief could be granted in such a case, & the demurrer must be overruled.—WOLVERHAMPTON & WALSALL RY. 714. ————]—Agreement negative in form—Affirmative in substance.]—The principle of Lumley v. Wagner, No. 706, ante, ought not to be applied to an agreement which, though negative in form, is affirmative in substance.

An agreement for the employment of a manager of a business contained a clause providing that the employer would not, except in the case of misconduct or a breach of the agreement, require the manager to leave his employ. The employer gave to the manager notice purporting to determine the agreement & the service created thereby, & the manager brought an action for an injunction to restrain the employer from acting on the notice:—Held: the clause above mentioned, though negative in form, was affirmative in substance, being equivalent to a stipulation by the employer that he would retain the manager in his employ, & an injunction ought not to be granted.—DAVIS v. FOREMAN, [1894] 3 Ch. 654; 64 L. J. Ch. 187; 43 W. R. 168; 8 R. 725.

The parties agreed to submit themselves in all cases of dispute to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Leipzig cts. & to the exclusive applicability of the German law. After the expiration of three months' previous notice to determine the agreement, deft. left the pltf's' employment on May 1, 1908, & entered the service of a rival English firm. Pltf's. then issued the writ in this action for injunctions & other relief. Deft. entered a conditional appearance & applied by summons to stay proceedings on the ground that the disputes should be referred to the Leipzig ct. Thereupon pltf's. served notice of motion for (a) an injunction to restrain deft. from engaging in any other business than theirs until after July 1, 1910, or until a final order by the Leipzig ct.; (b) an injunction restraining him for a similar period from divulging matters relating to the pltf's' business. On the hearing of the summons & motion:—Held: (1) pltf's. were not entitled to the first injunction asked on the ground that the stipulation sought to be enforced, although negative in form, was affirmative in substance, & the ct. could not grant an injunction which in effect would compel specific performance of a contract of service.

(2) The principle on which the ct. acts in restraining an employee from divulging matters relating to his master's business is that there is an implied term in the contract of service not to use, to the master's detriment, information obtained in the course of his service.—*KIRCHNER & Co. v. A. In General.

717. General rule — Contract affirmative in form—Negative in substance.]—Where a contract, although affirmative in form, is negative in substance, the ct. will, notwithstanding the absence of a negative stipulation, imply one, & grant an injunction accordingly, upon the principle of Lumley v. Wagner, No. 706, ante.

There was no covenant by the co. to supply, nor by deft. to take, any energy. Similar forms of request had been signed by other persons for different terms of years & at different prices:—Held: the request was in substance a contract not to take energy from any other person, & it could be enforced by injunction.—*METROPOLITAN ELECTRIC SUPPLY CO., LTD. v. 720. Not to employ vessel in different manner.]

—Where property, either immovable or movable, is disposed of with notice of a prior contract entered into by the person disposing of it for its use in a particular manner, the person taking it with such notice may be restrained from using it otherwise.

The ct. will not affirmatively enforce a charterparty, but it is implied in such a contract, that if the charterer provides a cargo, the ship shall not be employed for any other purpose; & a mtgee., with notice of a prior charterparty effected with the mtgor., will be in general restrained from doing anything to prevent its performance. Where, however, the mtgor. in such a case was unable to put the ship into proper repair to make the voyage, or otherwise to perform the contract, & the charterer took no step for several months with respect to it:—Held: the mtgee. ought not to be further restrained from exercising the powers contained in his mtge.—DE MATTOS v. GIBSON (1859), 4 De G. & J. 276; 28 L. J. Ch. 498; 34 L. T. O. S. 36; 5 Jur. N. S. 555; 7 W. R. 514; 45 E. R. 108, L. C.

721. By a charterparty the shipowner agreed that his vessel should proceed to a named port & there load a cargo for the charterer, & it was provided that if the vessel should not be at that port ready to load by a specified date, the charterer should be at liberty to cancel the charterparty. The vessel was then at another port unloading, & was delayed in doing so for so long that it became impossible for her to arrive at the agreed port by the specified date. The charterer refused to extend the time for cancellation, or to promise to load the vessel if she proceeded to the agreed port, & said that if he did load, the rate of freight must be reduced, & he insisted on the vessel proceeding to the agreed port. The shipowner thereupon refused to send his vessel there:—Held: an injunction ought not to be granted to restrain the shipowner from using the vessel for any purposes other than those of the charterparty.

Where there is a legal right, ordinarily the person having that right can come to a ct. of equity & obtain an injunction. That rule is, however, subject to this qualification, that pltf. must not have done anything which may disentitle him to come to a ct. of equity to ask for an injunction (SMITH, L.J.).—BUCKNALL BROTHERS v. TATEM & Co. (1900), 83 L. T. 121, C. A.

722. —.]—In consequence of the public announcement of an intended Royal naval review at Spithead on June 28, 1902, an agreement in writing was entered into between pltf. & deft. that pltf.'s steamship should be “at the disposal” of deft. on June 28 to take passengers from Herne Bay “for the purpose of viewing the naval review & for a day's cruise round the fleet; also on June 29 for similar purposes; price £250 payable, £50 down, balance before ship leaves Herne Bay.” On the signing of the agreement deft. paid the £50 deposit. On June 25 the review was officially cancelled, whereupon pltf. wired to deft. for instructions, stating that the ship was ready to start, & also requesting payment of the balance. Receiving no reply, pltf., on June 28 & 29, used the ship for their own purposes, thereby making a profit. On June 29 deft. repudiated the contract in toto. During the two days in question the fleet remained anchored at Spithead.

This contract did not amount to a demise of the ship. It was, however, a contract entered into for valuable consideration as to the employment of the ship on the two days in question; & it at least conferred this interest on deft., that if pltf. had attempted to violate it, that attempted violation would have been a ground for an injunction at the instance of pltf. to prevent it. That is established by De Mattos v. Gibson, No. 720, ante (STIRLING, L.J.).—HERNE BAY STEAM BOAT CO. v. HUTTON, [1903] 2 K. B. 683; 72 L. J. K. B. 879; 89 L. T. 422; 52 W. R. 183; 19 T. L. 723. —.]—A time charter provided that the owners should let & the charterers should hire a steamship for twelve months at a certain sum payable monthly for hire. The charter contained certain restrictions on the user of the ship & certain exceptions by one of which restraint of princes was mutually excepted. The charterers were to have the option of sub-letting the ship. After the ship had been placed at the charterers' disposal the Admiralty by notices addressed first to the owners & then to the charterers requisitioned the ship for the service of the Government, & sent the owners a form of charterparty free from the restrictions of the time charter & specifying a monthly sum for hire less than that named in the time charter. The ship was then placed at the disposal of the Admiralty & was restored to the owners during the currency of the time charter.

An injunction was granted restraining the owners from employing the vessel otherwise than in accordance with the terms of the charterparty, or from dealing with the vessel in any way so as to interfere with the charterers' right of use of the vessel under the charterparty:—Held: the owners were entitled to hire under the time charter notwithstanding the requisition of the ship by the Admiralty.—*MODERN TRANSPORT CO., LTD. v. The ship sailed, but received damage in a storm & was obliged to put into Belfast to repair. Here the coal was unloaded, & deft., being advised that by reloading it in its damaged state he would run the risk of spontaneous combustion, sold the greater part & delivered it to the purchaser. He then entered into another engagement for the employment of his vessel, & pltfs. filed this bill for an injunction. Upon pltfs.' undertaking to supply at the English port a second cargo of coal, & to compensate deft. for his loss of time upon the voyage to Belfast & back as the ct. might direct, an injunction was granted restraining deft. from using the vessel in any manner inconsistent with the charterparty. On appeal:—Held: the only right in pltfs. was to have the charterparty carried into effect; that had become impossible; there was no right to compel deft. to do what was never in the con-

It was further provided that B. & C., their agents, representatives, or assigns, should have the right to enter upon the premises at all times during the period for which the agreement was to continue in force, for the purpose of cutting & removing said timber; & that if B. & C. should remove the whole of the timber off the land before the expiration of the year, they would pay the whole of the purchase-money immediately after removing the said timber. B. & C. did not pay the $200, & after the expiration of one year from the date of the agreement, assigned it to defts., who had no actual notice that the $200 remained unpaid, but the agreement was registered against the lands:—Held: the vendor was entitled to an injunction to prevent cutting & removing by the defts. until the $200 was paid.—SUMMERS v. n. — Alleged breach of agreement.—The owner of lands over which the G. Ry. would pass offered to convey a portion thereof for a station house upon certain conditions, which offer was rejected. Afterwards an agreement was made with the solr. of the contractors, which was reduced into writing & signed by the owner, agreeing to convey a quantity of land not to exceed ten acres, upon condition that the station should be placed upon it. The owner afterwards refused to convey unless the contractors would secure to him three crossings over the railway track, & brought ejectment to turn the parties out of possession of the land so agreed to be conveyed. The ct. decreed specific performance of the agreement to convey & an injunction to stay the ejectment, notwithstanding that deft. swore that the condition upon which he agreed to convey was that the crossing should be secured to him.—JACKSON v. Shortly afterwards the road was leased, with notice of this agreement, to defts., who discontinued G. as a regular station, having no officer of the co. to sell tickets or make arrangements for despatching or receiving freight, but merely stopping there when there were any passengers to be let down or taken up:—Held: the mere erection of the station was not a fulfilment of the covenant, & the municipality was entitled to have it specifically performed. The decree, which enjoined defts. from allowing any of their ordinary freight, accommodation, express, or mail trains, other than special trains, to pass without stopping for the purpose of taking up or letting down passengers, was varied by limiting it to such trains as are usually stopped at ordinary stations.—WALLACE TOWNSHIP CORPN. v. Pl'ts. entered into a correspondence with deft. which resulted in an agreement by letter to purchase deft.'s patent. Pl'ts. afterwards insisted that the agreement included both the English & foreign patents. Deft.'s view was that he was selling only the English patent. A third party alleged that deft. was not in a position to deal with any of the patents, as a prior option of purchase had been given to him which he claimed to have exercised. Pl'ts. brought their action for specific performance of the agreement, & moved for an interim injunction to restrain deft. from parting with or dealing with any of the patents:—Held: pl'ts. were entitled to enforce their claim for specific performance with regard to the English patent; & as there were important questions to be decided at the hearing of the action upon the claim of the third party, an interim injunction ought to be granted.—PRESTON v. One of the arts. of assocn. said "the directors shall purchase" the N. street Brewery for £64,000. There being a difficulty in raising the requisite capital, the directors proposed to purchase a smaller brewery at B. Thereafter the first co. accepted payment from the second co., which had been bound by their Act to execute the works necessary for the function, & agreed to make additional sidings. The first co. then commenced making a siding within the limits of deviation of the second co., but on the land acquired under the disposition referred to. The siding affected one of the roads & bridges, & on the proprietor complaining, the second co. agreed with the first to go on with the works on their guaranteeing them against the costs of any litigation that might follow:—Held: whichever co. executed the works, the right to do so depended on & was excluded by the terms of the contract between the proprietor & the first co. therefore that the proprietor was entitled to interdict against the works proceeding, & the interdict declared perpetual.—EDINBURGH & GLASGOW RY. 740. — Disposal of property by directors.]—No doubt, a disposition of the property by the directors might be void in equity if it were contrary to the objects of the co.; the directors would then be restrained from doing the act, as being an abuse of their fiduciary position (SIR W. R. JAMES, L.J.).—Re PATENT FILE CO., Ex p. BIRMINGHAM BANKING CO. (1870), 6 Ch. App. 83; 40 L. J. Ch. 190; 23 L. T. 484; 19 W. R. 193, L. J.J.

741. To restrain exclusion from board of directors—Director holding shares in own right.]—

Pltf. was adjudicated a bkpt. in 1888 & never obtained his discharge. In Apr. 1902, he was a director of & held one thousand shares in a co. the arts. of assocn. of which required that the qualification of a director should be the holding "in his own right" of one hundred shares, & that his office should be vacated if he ceased to hold the qualifying number of shares. In the same month pltf.'s trustee in bkpcy. wrote to the co. claiming these shares as his, but postponing his decision whether he would be registered himself or have some nominee registered as transferee. Thereupon the other directors excluded pltf. from the board on the ground that he had become disqualified. Subsequently a transfer of one hundred other shares in pltf.'s favour was executed, & lodged with the co. for registration. Although the trustee had not raised any objection to registration the directors refused to register the transfer:—Held: pltf. had ceased to hold the one thousand shares "in his own right," & was not entitled to an injunction to restrain his exclusion from the board.—SUTTON v. ENGLISH & COLONIAL PRODUCE CO., [1902] 2 Ch. 502; 71 L. J. Ch. 685; 87 L. T. 438; 50 W. R. 571; 18 T. L. R. 647; 10 Mans. 101.

742. — Undisclosed interest in contract with company.]—Art. 70 of the arts. of assocn. of a co., provided that the office of any director should be vacated if, among other things, he contracted with the co., or was concerned in or participated in the profits of any contract with, or work done for the co., without declaring his interest at a meeting of the directors & that no director so interested should vote on any question relating to such contract or work. Pltf. was a director, & at a meeting of the board on Apr. 14, 1893, he informed the chairman, prior to the commencement of the business, that he was "jointly interested" with M. in a contract, concerning which some question was on the agenda paper for discussion, but he did not specify the precise nature or extent of his interest. Pltf. took no part in the business, & was recorded on the minutes as "neutral." At a meeting of the board on Aug. 11, 1893, no notice of which was given to pltf., a resolution was passed declaring that his seat as a director had been vacated under art. 70. On motion, treated by consent as the trial of the action:—Held: (1) "declare his interest" meant declare the nature of his interest, & the words were not satisfied by a mere declaration that pltf. had an interest in the matter; (2) notice should have been given to pltf. & a board meeting summoned to give him an opportunity of justifying himself.

745. To restrain carrying out resolution—Carried by show of hands—Opposition of majority of shareholders.]—A co.'s arts. provided that at general meetings resolutions were to be decided by a numerical majority of votes, unless a poll was demanded by three members, & that when two or more persons were entitled to a share the one whose name stood first on the register should be the only one entitled to vote. Pltfs., who numbered more than three, held a majority of shares & they opposed certain resolutions, which were, however, carried on a show of hands. Owing to some of pltfs.' shares being jointly held they only counted as two persons & so did not amount to the three persons necessary for the demand of a poll. Pltfs. brought an action to restrain the carrying out of the resolutions & asked for an injunction until the trial :—Held: without prejudice to the question whether pltfs. would be entitled to an injunction at the trial, they should have an interlocutory injunction.—CORY v. 746. — Electing directors—Validity of election.]—One of the arts. of assocn. of a co. provided that a member should not be qualified to be elected a director unless written notice of the intention in that behalf were given to the co. not less than fourteen clear days before the "day of election" of directors. The ordinary general meeting of the co. was held on Dec. 10, 1915, at which meeting, according to the arts. the two deft. directors retired by rotation. The report of the directors was not adopted; there was no election of directors, but a committee of shareholders was appointed to investigate the affairs of the co. & report to a general meeting, & the meeting stood adjourned to receive this report. On Feb. 21, 1916, written notice was given to the co. by a shareholder stating that at the adjourned meeting he proposed to move the election of four named members as directors. The adjourned meeting was held on Mar. 10, 1916, to consider the committee's report & to transact the unfinished business. The chairman ruled the notice of Feb. 21, 1916, to be out of order, & after declaring the election of auditors said there was no further business & left the chair. Subsequently the shareholders appointed a chairman & elected the four new directors. On motion by the shareholders for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the two former directors from acting :—Held: the day of election of directors within the meaning of the art. was the date of the adjourned meeting on Mar. 10, 1916; the notice of Feb. 21, 1916, was in compliance with that art.; & the first two persons elected as directors in lieu of the two who retired were duly elected. r. Agreement to alter articles—Injunction to restrain dealing with shares so as to impair right of voting.]—A co. was registered with a share capital of 50,000 of which 28,000 were allotted to deft. & 12,500 to pltfs. & L. It was then agreed that deft. should transfer 2,500 of his shares to pltfs., & that pltfs., deft. & L. or any two of them might sell all or any of the shares, transfers to carry out this being signed in blank. Pltfs. had two out of three seats on the board of directors, the other being held by deft. Subsequently a further agreement was entered into between pltfs. & deft. whereby, it was agreed to alter the arts. of assocn. so as to increase the number of directors & give pltfs. another seat on the board & both parties covenanted to do all acts by way of voting in respect of their shares or otherwise. Pltfs. commenced an action against defts. for specific performance of the latter agreement & pltfs. moved for an interlocutory order that deft. might be ordered to vote at meetings of the co. for the purpose of altering the articles & that he might be restrained from dealing with the shares of the co. under the powers contained in the first agreement :—Held: to order deft. to vote at meetings would be equivalent to ordering specific performance & injunction refused at that stage but injunction granted till hearing restraining deft. from dealing without pltfs. consent, with shares of the co. in any manner which might inspire his right to vote in respect of his shares or otherwise prevent specific performance.—ALLEN & SONS, LTD. v. 747. Exercise of statutory power to lower road.]—The trustees of a turnpike road agreed to assent to a bill in Parliament for the formation of a railway, on the condition that the railway should pass over the road at a sufficient elevation, & the road be not lowered or otherwise prejudiced. This qualified assent was returned in both houses of Parliament. The bill passed. Sect. 12 of the act, among other powers, authorised the co. to raise & sink rivers or streams, roads or ways, in order the more conveniently to carry the same over or under, or by the side of the railway, provided that the co. should not divert, obstruct, or impound any river or water to the prejudice of any mill or manufactory. Sect. 72 enacted, that the arch of any bridge for carrying the railway over or across any turnpike road, should be of a height from the surface of such road to the centre of such arch, of not less than 16 feet, provided that the descent under any such bridge should not exceed 1 foot in 30 feet. The act contained no particular proviso as to the road in question:—Held: the modified assent of the road trustees, the terms of which were neither embodied in any agreement between the trustees & the co., nor adopted by the legislature, afforded no equitable ground for restraining the co. from enforcing, with regard to the road in question, all the powers conferred by the act. The co. were authorised to sink the original surface of a turnpike road, in order to give the specified elevation to the arch of a bridge, erected for carrying the railway over such road, notwithstanding that the effect, from the peculiar situation of the road, would be, to render it liable to be occasionally flooded.—*ALDRED v. alleged were necessary for the supply of C., but which, they admitted, they intended to use for the purpose of carrying water beyond the limits of their powers. At the suit of the board of health of C., the ct. restrained the C. co. from laying down pipes under the streets of C. for the purpose of supplying with water any parish or place not being part of the port of C., or any parish or place within or adjoining such town.—*CARDIFF CORPN. v. 750. ———.]—A water co. authorised by their special Act to supply water to certain places, defined by the Acts to be the limits of the Act, cannot supply water outside those limits, although not expressly forbidden by the Act to do so. A water co., authorised by their special Acts to erect water-works & supply water within certain limits which included the parish of A., agreed to supply water to W., the owner of property in the adjoining parish of H., & accordingly extended their main in the parish of A. to the boundary where it adjoined the parish of H., & then, at the cost of W., laid a main some distance along a highway in the parish of H. & thence laid pipes to W.'s property:—Held: the water co. on the construction of their special Acts, were not by virtue either of any express or incidental powers entitled to supply water outside their statutory limits. The water co. were supplying water to W., not at the point where their mains reached the boundary in the parish of A., but at the terminals on W.'s property where he received and applied it to his use. Therefore, the water co. were acting ultra vires, & an injunction was granted at the suit of the A.-G.—A.-G. v. WEST GLOUCESTERSHIRE WATER Co., [1909] 2 Ch. 338; 78 L. J. Ch. 746; 101 L. 751. — Amalgamation of companies—Lease of railway.]—A railway co. entered into an agreement to lease their line to another co. The agreement contained provisions which were legal & others which were ultra vires, but an application was to be made to Parliament for power to carry out such provisions as should be ultra vires:—Held: as the agreement provided for a number of things to be done, which were all for the purpose of accomplishing a certain object that was ultra vires, the parties had no right, by virtue of that agreement, until they had obtained the authority of Parliament, to do even those acts which independently of the agreement they did not require the authority of Parliament to do. The ct., in granting an injunction to this extent, refused to restrain two directors, appointed under the agreement, from acting, on the ground that the directors had power to remove them, & that their removal might be detrimental to the business of the co.—*HATTERSLEY v. Act, 1887 (c. 171), which authorised them to construct & operate, on all days except Sunday, a street railway:—Held: an action would not lie by the Crown to restrain defts. from operating the road on Sunday, the restriction against their doing so being at most an implied one, & no substantial injury to the public, or any interference with proprietary rights, being shown.—*A.-G. v. d. To restrain evasion of statute.—22 Vict. c. 122, incorporating the Northwest Transit Co., enacted that it should not be lawful for the co. to proceed with their operations under the Act until £50,000 of the capital stock should have been subscribed, & 10 per cent. paid thereon. Subsequently, & before £50,000 had been subscribed or the percentage paid thereon, a proposition was made by C. to certain stockholders in the enterprise, that C. should sell a steam vessel belonging to him to the co. for £5,000, & that in that event he should become a subscriber to the amount of £50,000, & that the steamer should be paid for by taking her as a payment of 10 per cent. on the £50,000, which was acceded to, & the subscription & purchase made accordingly, in compliance with a resolution of the co.:—Held: this was an evasion of the statute, & an injunction was granted on motion, restraining the co. from proceeding with any of the operations thereof until the conditions pointed out by the statute had been complied with.—HOWLAND v. MCNAB (1860), 8 Gr. 47.—CAN.

e. To enforce performance of statutory duty.—A railway co. who take possession of land under the compulsory powers conferred by the statute, are bound to erect fences for the proper separation of the railway from the remainder of the land, within six months from the time of possession being taken, not from the time of notice being given requiring such fences to be constructed, which need only be a reasonable notice to fence; & if they neglect to do so they may be enjoined from further using the line of railway. Under the circumstances:—Held: the possible injury & loss to defts., by the sudden & immediate stoppage of their work, largely outweighed any possible advantage to the pltf.; & the proper relief was by a mandamus, or mandatory injunction, requiring the co. to construct the fences; & if there was jurisdiction to restrain the further use of the road, as to which any expression of opinion was avoided, it should not be exercised in the case of a contumacious refusal.—*MASSON v. To restrain interference with foreshore.—Held: comrs. of sewers are entitled to restrain a railway co. by injunction until the hearing, from interfering with a natural deposit of beach forming a protection to the country from the inundations of a tidal navigable river within the survey of the comrs.; & this notwithstanding a purchase by the railway co. from the lord of the manor, under their Parliamentary powers, of the spot in question.—*CROSSMAN v. 756. To restrain obstruction of light.—Pltf. was the owner in fee of a house with three windows overlooking the station yard of defts., a railway co. Pltf. or his predecessors had enjoyed light & air through the windows without interruption for sixteen years, when defts. requested him to pay a nominal rent for the enjoyment of the light & air. Pltf. having refused to pay the rent, the co. put up a screen on their land & blocked up the lights. In an action to restrain defts. from interfering with the light & air of pltf., an interlocutory mandatory injunction was granted directing defts. to pull down & remove the obstruction complained of, until the hearing of the action or until further order:—Held: the injunction must be dissolved, pltf. not having acquired a right to light & air, & a railway co. being, prima facie, entitled to use the schedule to the latter Act, defts. were bound to sell the tickets called "workmen's tickets" upon their cars to the public & to receive them in payment of fares at the hours mentioned in the bye-law, not from workmen only, but from the public generally. Defts. having refused to sell certain classes of tickets upon their cars, or to accept them from persons from whom they were bound to accept them in payment of fares, were restrained from running cars upon which these tickets were not kept for sale, & this restraint was coupled with a declaration that they were bound to sell them on their cars to all persons desiring to buy them, & to receive them from all persons in payment of fares during the hours mentioned in the bye-law.—*HAMILTON v. In an action by pltfs. to restrain the co. from polluting the water supply with gas escaping from their pipes, which pltfs. alleged to be defective:—Held: defts. had no statutory authority to create a nuisance, & there was a nuisance; as however, it had ceased after action brought, there would be no injunction, but a declaration that defts. were not entitled to pollute pltfs.' water.—*BATCHELLER v. After the expiration of that period & until the year 1909, deft. co. & its predecessors in title continued the business & erected from time to time new poles & wires in the streets without procuring any extension of the franchise, but also without any action being taken by the town to prevent the carrying on of the business:—Held: the town was not estopped from passing a bye-law in 1909 revoking & terminating the rights & privileges previously granted & then exercised by deft. co. & requiring the immediate removal of all their poles & wires from the streets & was entitled to a declaration that deft. co. had no right any longer to maintain its system, an injunction to restrain it from maintaining the same or erecting poles or wires or transmitting electricity within the Town, & an order requiring the co. to remove their poles & equipment from the streets of the Town.—*SELKIRK TOWN v. Powers granted under Dominion Act—Exercise in violation of Provincial law—Whether restrained.]—Canadian Act, 37 Vict. c. 103, which created a corp'n. with power to carry on certain definite kinds of business within the Dominion, was within the legislative competence of the Dominion Parliament. The fact that the corp'n. chose to confine the exercise of its powers to one Province, & to local & provincial objects, did not affect its status as a corporation, or operate to render its original incorporation illegal as ultra vires of the said Parliament:—Held: the corp'n. could not be prohibited generally from acting as such within the Province; nor could it be restrained from doing specified acts in violation of the provincial law upon a petition not directed & adapted to that purpose.—*LORANGER v. 760. To restrain illegal payments out of corporate funds—Breach of trust—Endowment of churches.]—In cases of injunction, the ct. exercises a discretion; so that where the effect of continuing an injunction would have been to exclude a question on a doubtful statute from ever being discussed, & no apparent danger to the property was shown, the ct. dissolved the injunction.

When any act involving a breach of trust is intended to be done, though not in its consequences irremediable, the ct. will prevent it by injunction.

It is an established rule, that where a party obtains an ex p. injunction by misrepresenting the facts of the case, he shall not afterwards be permitted to support the injunction, by showing another state of circumstances in which he would be entitled to it.

By Municipal Corporation Act, 1835 (c. 76), all the property then belonging to corpsns. included therein, became, from the passing of the Act until the election of the new officers, held by the old corpn. in trust for the public for the purposes mentioned in that statute. Between the passing of the Act, & the election of the new officers, the old corpn. raised out of its property a sum of £105,000, & appropriated the same towards the better endowment of the clergy of the town, who were inadequately provided for:—Held: such an application of the funds was contrary to the spirit of that Act, & on the part of the old corpn., a breach of trust.—*A.-G. v. 761. — Compensation for loss of office.]

—Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (c. 76), creates a public trust of the property of municipal corpsns. & of the funds raised for the purposes of the Act, subject, like other property held in trust, to the jurisdiction of the ct. of Ch. Although the Act contains provisions for correcting abuses in respect of the borough property, there is nothing in it to exclude the ordinary jurisdiction of the ct. of Ch. to prevent breaches of trust:—Held: accordingly, that a bond given by the town council of a borough, to secure compensation out of the borough fund to an officer, for the profits of offices, some of which he continued to hold, was a breach of trust & illegal.—PARR v. A.-G. (1842), 8 Cl. & Fin. 409; 8 E. R. 159; sub nom. A.-G. v. PARR, 5 Jur. 245, H. L.; affg. S. C. sub nom. A.-G. v. POOLE CORPN. (1838), 4 My. & Cr. 17, L. C.

762. — Costs of opposing quo warranto proceedings—Title & existence of corporation in question.]—Pltf. seeking to charge a party with the consequences of a breach of trust, is bound so to state his case upon the bill that the circumstances alleged, if proved, must necessarily & at all events constitute a breach of trust. Where, therefore, an information is filed, alleging that certain payments, charged to be illegal & improper, were about to be made, by a municipal corpn., out of the corporate funds, & praying that the corpn. might be restrained from making them, but the payments were of such a kind that, under certain circumstances, the existence of which was not negatived by any statements in the information, they might be justifiable, a demurrer for want of equity was allowed.

Semble: a municipal corpn. is justified in discharging, out of the corporate funds, the expenses of opposing quo warranto informations against individual members of the corporation, if the object of such informations be to impeach the title, or destroy the legal existence of the corpn., as a body.—*A.-G. v. t. To restrain railway construction—Pending declaratory action.]—An Act of Parliament authorised the construction of a railway from Cape Town to Wellington by a private co. The co. commenced the terminus for the latter place at a distance of nearly a mile from the village. It was alleged on behalf of the co. that the cost of bringing the railway right into the village would, owing to engineering difficulties, be very great. On application by an inhabitant of the village:—Held: an interdict must be granted restraining the co. from going on with the erection of the terminus pending a declaratory action to be forthwith brought by appot.—MALAN v. CAPE TOWN & WELLINGTON RY. Co. (1861), 4 S. 81.—S. AF.

It is not, however, the function of the ct. to supervise the council's work or to dictate to it what contract should or should not be accepted by it. All that the ct. can do is to lay down the general principle of law & inquire whether it has been violated by the corpn. The ct. will set aside as ultra vires a contract entered into by a municipal corpn. that is, on the face of it, manifestly impolitic, improvident, 766. To prevent breach of trust—Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (c. 76).]—(1) The funds belonging to the municipal corpns. of boroughs named in schedules A. & B. of above Act became, upon the passing of that Act, subject to certain public trusts, to be exercised by the new council, only in the manner & for the purposes prescribed by the Act.

An appropriation of such funds, made by the old corp., after the passing of the Act, but before the election of the new council, & having for its object to endow the churches & chapels of the established church within the borough with fixed stipends, for their several ministers, is not an appropriation warranted by the Act, & is therefore a breach of trust. The ordinary jurisdiction of the ct. over such a transaction, by means of an information seeking to have the funds recalled, & the appropriation rescinded, as being a breach of trust, is not ousted by the special remedies provided in certain cases by sect. 97 of above Act. Semble: those remedies would not be applicable in any case in a transaction of this description.

(2) Where property is devoted to trusts which are to arise at a future time, & be exercised by trustees who are not yet in esse, any intermediate act done by the holders of such property, inconsistent with the security of the property, or the performance of the trusts when they shall arise, will be set aside; & if the trusts are of a public nature, the ct. will entertain this jurisdiction upon an information by the A.-G., notwithstanding that the trustees, after they have come into esse, themselves decline to interfere.—*A.-G. v. In 1888 a municipal corp. put up corporate land for sale by auction in fifteen lots subject to special conditions of sale; one of which provided that the purchaser of each lot

Upon information by the A.-G. of Canada, an injunction was granted restraining the continuance of the work. This action was then brought by pltf. individually as a ratepayer to restrain the corp. from expending any part of the $5,200 in payment for the work:—Held: an injunction should be granted restraining the application of the money to any further construction of

should erect thereon a dwelling house & should not erect thereon any building other than such house. None of the lots were then sold. In June, 1888, pltf. agreed with the corpn. to purchase two of the lots, subject to the conditions. The approval of the Treasury to the sale, required by the Act, was obtained; & in Nov. 1888, the lots were conveyed to pltf., two of the Lords of the Treasury being parties to the conveyance. When the approval of the Treasury was obtained they were not informed that there was a general building scheme the effect of which would be to give pltf. rights in relation to other land of the corpn. No approval of the special conditions were ever given by the Treasury. In May, 1893, the corpn. agreed to sell to the other defts., the trustees of a Presbyterian church, two other lots, for the purpose of their erecting a church thereon. On motion by pltf. for an injunction to restrain the corpn. & the trustees from erecting or permitting to be erected on the land so sold to them, any church or building other than a dwelling house:—Held: though if the vendors had been private individuals & not a municipal corpn. pltf. would have been entitled to an injunction yet as pltf.'s right against the trustees depended upon a disposition of corporate land on conditions which had not been approved by the Treasury, the motion must be refused.—*DAVIS v. Defts. obtained legislation enabling them to give the guarantee, & afterwards the council passed a resolution accepting the offer & giving the guarantee, which resolution was communicated to A., & the receipt thereof acknowledged by him. At a later meeting of the city council a resolution was passed to rescind all previous resolutions in relation to the matter:—Held: there was a binding contract between defts. & A., & the ct. would interfere by injunction, at the suit of the A.-G. upon the relation of a ratepayer, to restrain a breach of the contract. E., who were to maintain & repair the tramways. The corpn. of S. duly constructed these tramways, & in 1908 granted to a tramway co., the owners of tramways, beyond & extending to the western boundary of the borough of E., a revocable licence to run cars over a short portion of the tramways in that borough which adjoined the co.'s system. No consent to this licence was obtained either from the corpn. of E. or from the Board of Trade, the parties to the licence relying on the fact that they had, under their respective special Acts, powers of entering into working agreements with adjacent tramway owners similar in all material respects to those in the special Act of the corpn. of E., save that there was no provision requiring the approval of the Board of Trade. The corpn. of E. claimed a declaration that the corpn. of S. were not entitled to authorise the co. to use the portion of the tramway in the borough of E. & an injunction to restrain the co. from running tramcars along such portion & from otherwise using or trespassing upon the same:—Held: there was nothing in the Tramways Act, 1870 (c. 78), or in the special Act of the corpn. of E. which empowered them, without the consent of the Board of Trade, to authorise the co. to run cars over the tramways of the corpn. of E., & the agreement of that corpn. with the corpn. of S. did not purport to confer upon the latter any greater powers than the corpn. of E. themselves had, & consequently the licence was ultra vires, & the corpn. of E. were entitled to the declaration & injunction claimed by them.—*SALFORD CORPN. v. 775. To restrain enforcement of demolition order—Housing & Town Planning Act, 1909 (c. 44).—Pltf. was the owner of certain houses in R., as to which the housing committee of the corpn. on Feb. 23, 1914, on the report of the medical officer of health, & after hearing pltf.'s solr. recommended that a closing order should be made, & that the medical officer of health should prepare specifications of what was necessary to make the houses fit for habitation, which was accordingly done. The order was made on Mar. 4. Pltf. appealed to the Local Government Board, & the appeal was heard on May 5. At the hearing the town clerk stated that on the order becoming operative the council were willing to place at the

to be paid for in five yearly instalments, notwithstanding Municipal Act, c. 100, s. 396, this action was brought by a ratepayer & a motion made for an injunction to prevent the proposed purchase:—Held: a suit or an injunction was proper in such a case.—*SHRIMPTON v. a. — Powers under bye-laws.—A municipal corpn. passed a bye-law & it was approved by the electors. The bye-law provided for construction of sidewalks five feet wide along certain streets & to raise money by way of debentures to pay for the same. The city engineer was placed in charge of matters of grade, etc. The work was to have been completed in 1904. In 1905, objection being raised as to the validity of the bye-law the council passed two other bye-laws which were not submitted to the people. They adopted the city engineer's plans & reduced the sidewalk to only four feet:—Held: these two bye-laws were ultra vires as the council had not the power to extend the time allowed in the first bye-law for the construction of the walks, nor to vary the width & purpose of them. Injunction granted to restrain the money being raised on debentures.—CLEARY v. TOWN OF WINDSOR (1905), 6 O. W. R. 192; 10 O. L. R. 333.—CAN.

b. To restrain exercise of discretionary powers.—Acts within the discretionary powers of a municipal council are not subject to judicial control, except where fraud is imputed & shown, or there is a manifest invasion of private rights. e. —Where a corpn. being desirous of widening a street entered into an arrangement to buy the leasehold interests in several pieces of land from different persons, when the non-completion of one purchase would render the completion of the rest of no value:—Held: it was an improvident arrangement, & the ct. would interfere by injunction.—SOLICITOR-GENERAL v. DUNEDIN CORPN. (1875), 1 J. R. N. S. 1.—N.Z.

f. To restrain payments of wages—Where question of policy for council—& not ultra vires.—It is not ultra vires or in itself unreasonable for the council of a corpn. to provide by resolution that contractors on corpn. works should agree to pay their labourers or other workmen not less than a stated minimum rate of wages, & that such minimum rate should be paid to all labouring men to be employed on any contracts for corporation work, or on any new construction work undertaken by the corpn., although competent workmen might be hired at a lower rate of wages. In this case it was shown that deft.'s council had acted on such a resolution for three years, & evidence was given to show that the rate provided was not more than a fair living rate of wages in the city, & that the council was actuated by the belief that it was not in the interest of the city to have a number of its citizens employed at less than a fair living wage. No evidence was given to show that deft.'s council had so acted through any fraudulent or improper motive:—Held: the matter in dispute appeared to be a question of policy in the government of the city as to the expediency of which the ratepayers & not the ct. should pronounce, & pltf.'s motion for an injunction to restrain defts. from continuing to act on the resolution complained of should be dismissed.—KELLY v. CITY OF WINNIPEG (1898), 12 Man. L. R. 87.—CAN.

k. To restrain wrongful exercise of powers under bye-law.—By R. S. O. 1887, c. 184, s. 550, the council of every township is authorised to pass bye-laws for searching for & taking such timber, gravel, etc., as may be necessary for keeping in repair any road or highway within the municipality. The meaning of this sect. is, that the council may, as necessity arises for their doing so, exercise the right to take gravel, etc., from any particular parcel or parcels of land, having first declared the necessity to exist & chosen & described the land from which the material is to be taken, by a bye-law; & therefore, a bye-law purporting to be passed under this sect., which authorised & empowered the pathmasters & other employees of the corpn. to enter upon any land within the municipality when necessary to do so, save & except orchards, gardens, & pleasure grounds, & search for & take any timber, gravel, etc., was upon its face illegal, because it purported to confer upon its officers wider & more extensive powers than the statute authorised:—Held: pltf. was entitled without quashing the bye-law to an injunction to restrain the rights they claimed under this bye-law, by entering upon his lands.—ROSE v. WEST WAWANOSH TOWNSHIP (1890), 19 O. R. 294.—CAN.

l. —Where a municipal corpn. passes a bye-law for the construction of a particular kind of road, the owners of property assessed for the cost of construction have a right to restrain the corpn. from proceeding to construct a different kind of road.—ARBUTHNOT v. VICTORIA CITY (1913), 15 B. C. R. 209.—CAN.

m. To restrain passing illegal bye-law.—Where a municipal corpn. has jurisdiction to owner's disposal all information & particulars in their possession to assist her in making the houses fit for habitation. The order became operative on July 2 by the Local Government Board dismissing the appeal. No application was made by or on behalf of the owner for such assistance, & on Mar. 15, 1915, the committee, after hearing the solr., recommended that a demolition order should be made, which was made accordingly on May 3, & served on May 6. The following day her solr. wrote that she was willing to put the property in proper repair, & on May 20 he wrote again that the architect had gone into the matter, & instructions had been given to the builder to prepare specifications & tender, & asked the council whether they would see if they met their requirements. That letter was answered on May 28 to the effect that when a demolition order had been made there was no option but to see it carried out, & that any works executed would be done with full knowledge that when the time came to put the order in execution the premises would be pulled down. On July 15 the town clerk wrote again that the medical officer of health had advised that the property could not be rendered fit & that it would be demolished. On July 16 pltf.'s solr. wrote to arrange an interview between the architect & the medical officer of health. On July 19 the town clerk replied acknowledging the receipt of the specifications and saying that until the committee had again considered the matter the medical officer of health was not prepared to meet the architect. The committee met on July 26 & without considering the suggested method of repair reported that the house could not be rendered fit. The matter was mentioned to the council & the owner informed that the premises must come down. The writ was then issued & an injunction claimed to restrain the corpn. from enforcing the demolition order:—Held: defts. having taken up the attitude that whether the premises were rebuilt or not they must be pulled down, & that it was useless to submit plans & discuss the matter on the ground that they were entitled ex p. to decide that they could not be rendered fit, it could not be said that there had been a proper exercise of the discretion under sub-sect. 3 of above Act, & pltf. was therefore entitled to an injunction to restrain them from acting on the demolition order until they had heard & determined pltf.'s application for postponement, as above indicated.—BROADBENT v. ROTHERHAM CORPN., [1917] 2 Ch. 31; 86 L. J. Ch. 501; 117 L. T. 120; 81 J. P. 193; 61 Sol. Jo. 460; 15

o. To restrain plebiscite on unauthorised bye-law.—There is nothing in the Municipal Act permitting a municipal council to take a plebiscite, & there is no express prohibition against doing so. Taking a vote of the electors upon questions or upon authorised bye-laws is open to grave objections. Where a council sought to take such a vote on the question of a money grant in aid of a sanatorium, which they had not power to make, with a view to inform the Legislature of the result, &, if favourable, to use the result as an argument in attempting to obtain for the council legislative authority to make the grant, they were restrained by injunction from so doing.—KING v. CITY OF TORONTO (1902), 23 C. L. T. 92; 5 O. L. R. 163; 1 O. W. R. 843.—CAN.

p. To restrain submitting bye-law to vote—Other remedy available.—The failure to publish the notice of the voting on a local option bye-law required by Liquor Licence Act, 1902, c. 66, is good ground for an application under Municipal Act to quash the bye-law if afterwards carried & passed by the council at the third reading, but an injunction to prevent the council from submitting the bye-law to the vote of the electors will not be granted by reason only of the failure to publish such notice, because of the existence of another adequate remedy in case the bye-law should be carried, viz., an application to quash it.—LITTLE v. MCCARTNEY, JOHNSTON v. WRIGHT (1908), 18 Man. L. R. 323; 9 W. L. R. 448.—CAN.

The application was approved by a committee of the city council, & the committee's recommendation was adopted by resolution of the council. Six months later, after pltf. had completed the purchase of the property & taken steps to erect her buildings, the Board of Control, in a report to the council, recommended the rescission of the former recommendation & resolution:—Held: pltf. was entitled at that stage to an injunction restraining the corpn. & council from rescinding the recommendation & resolution.—*CHEKSWORTH v. After the bridge had been used for several years, applt. municipality passed a bye-law to erect a free bridge across the C. river in close proximity to the toll bridge in existence. Resp. thereupon by petition for injunction prayed that applt. municipality be restrained from proceeding to the erection of a bridge:—Held: the erection of the free bridge would be an infringement of resp.'s franchise of a toll bridge, & the injunction should be granted.—*AUBERT-GALLION CORPN. v. 778. To restrain exercise of powers—Purchaser of land without funds in hand—Commissioners under local Act.]—The comrs. appointed under the local Acts of Parliament for improving the town of Cambridge have, upon the true construction of those acts, a continuing right to exercise from time to time the power thereby vested in them, of taking property for the purposes of the Acts, & of referring the assessment of the price to a jury, so long as may be required for carrying into full effect the purposes contemplated by the acts.

A person whose property is required by the comrs. for the purposes of the Acts is not entitled to restrain them, by injunction, from taking the steps prescribed by the Acts for obtaining possession of the property, until they shall have shown a sufficient fund in hand to satisfy the price which may be awarded to him, or until they shall have shown the means by which they propose to procure it.—*SALMON v. watercourse, stream, river, etc., in which the owner of any lands may be interested, without the consent of such owner:—Held: (1) persons having a right to watering-places in a river adjoining their lands, for the use of their cattle, are interested in the river within the meaning of the proviso, but would not be able to maintain an action for an interference with their rights, unless they were injured by such interference; (2) works of a local board of health, producing an outfall of the sewage of a town above such a watering-place, was such an interference as to cause injury to the landowners, but whether this was established or not, it ought, if not consented to by them, to be restrained by injunction, being the act of a public body exceeding its powers.—*OLDAKER v. 780. — — Abstraction of water.]—The ct. will not restrain the Metropolitan Board of Works, or a district board, from making a sewer within the scope of their powers, although the consequence may be to drain water springs rising in a field contiguous to the pleasure grounds attached to a dwelling house, & collected by the owner into a pond or piece of ornamental water made in the grounds & thence diverted in an ornamental stream flowing through the grounds.—*STANTON v. 783. To compel exercise of powers.]—A vestry sanctioned the drainage of certain houses by means of cesspools with overflow pipes connecting with main pipes. Sewage passed into the main pipes, & from thence into a watercourse, & caused a nuisance within the district of an adjoining local board. The vestry had power to take proceedings under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), & Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), with respect to this nuisance, & the local board also had power to proceed under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55). 786. Excess of statutory powers — Change of sanitary conveniences.]—A district board of works acting under Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), made an ex p. order on pltf. to turn into water-closets the privies attached to certain cottages belonging to him, & on his failing to do so, they proceeded to enter upon the premises for the purpose of doing it themselves. The order appeared to have been made, not with regard to the state of this particular property, but in consequence of a previous determination to substitute water-closets for privies throughout the district:—Held: the board were exceeding their statutory powers & ought to be restrained from entering on

788. Interference with watercourse — Abstraction of water.]—(1) Although a landowner will not in general be restrained from drawing off the subterranean waters in the adjoining land, yet he will be restrained if, in so doing, he draws off the water flowing in a defined surface channel through the adjoining land.

It was said that this would be a mandatory injunction but that objection loses its force in a case where the complaint was made immediately before the damage was done, & where it was met by a written notice on the parts of those who were about to do the works that no such damage would be done or would accrue (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).—*GRAND JUNCTION CANAL CO. v. the former conveyance, pltf., being the owner of house property near the common, stipulated that if, within five years from the date of the deed, the common should not be enclosed & dedicated to the public, having no part of it sold or let on building leases, he, pltf., should re-purchase his share of the manor on giving the same price for it as he was then receiving. The Board of Works, with notice of this stipulation memorialised the Inclosure Comrs. to prepare & certify a scheme of local management; & the Comrs., on the suggestion of the Board, published a scheme, whereby it was proposed to give the Board power to sell or let on building leases a small outlying portion of the common, for the purpose of recouping to the Board their expenses of & attending the inclosure. Upon bill to restrain the Board from promoting the scheme, or any scheme inconsistent with the stipulation:—Held: (1) the Board of Works were bound by the stipulation in the conveyance by pltf.; (2) pltf.'s right, under the stipulation, to sue in equity was not affected by the circumstances that the scheme, in order to become operative, must be submitted to Parliament; & injunction granted as prayed.—*TELFORD v. 790. To restrain board from enforcing order—Pending case stated.]—Orders having been obtained by a local board from the justices, for payment by A. & L. & others, of a rate levied for defraying the expense of paving a certain street, an agreement was come to that the order against L., should not be enforced for three months, in order to enable a case to be stated for the opinion of the Ct. of Q. B., on a point of law. An understanding was, at the same time, come to, that the order against A. should abide the decision in L.'s case. L., instead of taking the case to the Q. B., went before the Quarter Sessions, & the order against him was quashed on a technical ground. A., was not informed of the course taken by L., & the three months having expired within which she could have appealed, the local board obtained an order against her for payment of the rate. On motion by A. to restrain the board from enforcing the order, until she had had an opportunity of stating a case for the opinion of the Q. B.:—Held: the ct. had power to restrain the local board from enforcing the order, & on A. undertaking to consent to a case for the opinion of the Q. B., & to pay the amount of the rate into ct., injunction was granted.—ASHWORTH v. HEBDEN BRIDGE LOCAL BOARD (1877), 47 L. J. Ch. 195; 37 L. T. 496.

791. Discharge of road water into private ground.]—Pltf. was the owner of a house & land on the slope of a hill up which ran a high road, & on his land there was a chalk dell. The road was, some time prior to the formation of deft. board, a turnpike road, & some time during the existence of the turnpike trust the surface water of the road was conducted into the dell through pipes, which discharged the water into a "dumb well" or shaft, sunk in the chalk, from which it percolated through the subsoil:—Held: the dumb well was not a "drain or watercourse" within the meaning of Highway Act, 1835 (c. 50), s. 67; defts had shown no right to use it as part of their drainage system; & pltf. was entitled to an injunction to restrain them from so using it.—*CROFT v. 792. Carrying water mains through private land.]—By Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), ss. 16, 54, urban local authorities are empowered to carry water mains through, across or under certain roads, streets cellars & vaults &, after giving "notice to the owner or occupier, if, on the report of the surveyor it appears necessary, into, through or under any lands situate within their district." In Dec. 1887, the surveyor of defts. an urban local authority died. On Jan. 11, 1888, defts. by resolution appointed P. a civil engineer in their employment "surveyor to the board until a further permanent surveyor be appointed." On Mar. 21, 1888, P. reported to defts. that it was "desirable & advisable" that their water-main should be carried in a particular direction from one point to another & that it would be "necessary" to lay it through land belonging to pltf. which was within the district. This report was signed "your surveyor P." Four days after its date Y. was duly appointed a surveyor to defts. & P. who was a candidate for the office was retained in their service as waterworks engineer. The report of Mar. 21 was considered & adopted by the board on Apr. 11, 1888, & in the following month a notice in pursuance thereof was served on pltf. that defts. intended to carry their main through a part of his lands. Upon motion made in an action by pltf. for an injunction to restrain defts. from so doing:—Held: the word "necessary" must be construed as meaning "necessary for the efficient discharge of the duty in the way most for the benefit of the public"; upon the words of sect. 16 of the Act the person to determine the necessity was the surveyor; & if the ct. found that he had exercised his judgment & come to a conclusion in good faith the ct. ought not to interfere, even although other courses were shown to be practicable by which the entry on private lands might be avoided; "the surveyor" mentioned in sect. 16 must in the case of an urban authority be the fit & proper person duly appointed to be surveyor under sect. 189 of the Act & no other; & P. was not "the surveyor" of defts. within sects. 16 & 189; & as the report on which the proceedings of the defts. was founded was not the report of "the surveyor" pltf. was entitled to an interlocutory injunction.—*LEWIS v. To restrain proceeding with notice to treat—Owners right of presumption.]—A board of works contracted to sell to a purchaser such part of the land occupied by two houses as was not required to carry out a scheme for widening a street. A resolution was then passed by the board adjudging that it was necessary to acquire the whole of the two houses, & notice to treat for the same was given to the owner pursuant to Metropolitan Paving Act, 1817 (c. xxix):—Held: the adjudication was wrong & ultra vires, as the board must have been influenced by the existence of the prior contract for sale, which deprived the owner of his right of pre-emption under sect. 96 of the Act; & a perpetual injunction must be granted to restrain them from proceeding with their notice to treat.—FERNLEY v. 795. To restrain construction of tramway—Not shown on deposited plans.]—The piece of line in question is not a "junction" & is not authorised by sect. 7 [of the local Act]. If that is so, then it can only be constructed under sect. 12, with the proviso with which the corpn. has not complied. The result is that the tramway was not constructed in accordance with the powers of the Act, & there must be an injunction against the corpn. compelling them to remove so much of the tramway as was not delineated upon the deposited plans (JOYCE, J.).—WILKINSON & MARSHALL v. 796. To restrain payment of unsanctioned loan.]—Defts. in 1903 obtained the sanction of the Local Government Board to a loan for the erection of municipal buildings. They spent, over & above the amount of the loan, a further sum of £18,350, which was borrowed from their bankers by way of overdraft. In 1907 defts. applied to the Local Government Board for leave to borrow the amount thus overspent, but as to £4,910, a portion thereof, sanction was refused. In Oct. 1908, defts. proposed to levy a general district rate to enable them to pay the £4,910, but were restrained by the ct. from doing so until the trial of this action. Before action brought, defts. had paid a sum of £855 for interest on their bank overdraft, & they proposed to pay a further sum of £900 for interest. The most recent of the items composing the £4,910 had been expended more than a year before the date of the proposed rate:—Held: the loan of the sum of £4,910 to defts. from the bank by way of overdraft, without the sanction of the Local Government Board, was illegal ; defts. must be restrained from applying any part of the general district fund or rate or any other public fund or rate under their control in repayment of the loan or any part thereof ; defts. were not entitled to make any payment of interest upon money borrowed without the sanction of the Local Government Board, whether such borrowing was by means of overdraft or otherwise the payment by defts. of the £855 was unlawful & ought to be disallowed by the auditor on auditing defts.' accounts, but this declaration was in no way to affect the power of the Local Government Board to remit such disallowed payment, though unlawfully made, under any statute enabling them so to do ; defts. must be perpetually restrained from making any further payments of interest upon money borrowed without the sanction of the Local Government Board or other statutory sanction, whether such borrowing be by way of overdraft or otherwise.—A.-G. 797. Removal of electric standard—Highway not repairable by public.]—Pltf. was the owner & occupier of a hotel which fronted on a street. The hotel was erected on land which, at the time when the hotel was erected, was bounded by an old parish road. It was set back 4 or 5 feet from the boundary of the road, a pavement being laid in front by pltf.'s predecessor in title, his father, upon his own land. Defts., a local authority, having obtained a provisional order, duly confirmed, for the supply of electrical energy, which empowered & required them to lay distributing mains in the street on which the hotel fronted, subsequently obtained the sanction of the Board of Trade to a supply by means of overhead mains in that street. For the purposes of that supply, but without the consent either of pltf. or of the Board of Trade, they erected a standard on the pavement in front of, & close to, the hotel, & fixed it below the soil into the footings of the hotel wall. The paved strip of land had never been acquired by defts. ; it had become a highway as having been dedicated by pltf.'s father to the use of the public, but it was not repairable by the inhabitants at large. It remained the property of pltf., who, although not legally liable to repair the pavement, had done so from time to time. Pltf., having brought an action for a mandatory injunction to compel defts. to remove the standard:—Held: pltf. was entitled to a mandatory injunction for the removal of the standard.—ANDREWS v. 798. To restrain making illegal rate—Expenses of festivities.]—In Apr. 1911, the Local Government Board, in pursuance of their statutory powers, & in anticipation of public local celebrations on the occasion of the coronation of King George V., issued a general order to all local authorities whereby they sanctioned beforehand "any reasonable expenses" that might be incurred by any local authority in connection with any local public celebration on the occasion of the coronation of King George V., & on May 2 deft. council passed a resolution that a sum not exceeding three farthings in the pound should be expended out of the rates in carrying out the coronation festivities in the district. The three farthings instructions & regulations issued by, inter alios, any officer of the army:—Held: the action of defenders was ultra vires, in spite of the fact that they had undertaken the work at the request of the military authorities & with the sole motive of furthering the public interest ; & interdict granted.—GRIEVE v. rate would produce about £240. The A.-G., at the relation of certain ratepayers, brought an action against the local authority to restrain them from paying the £240 out of the rates on the ground that such payment would be ultra vires & illegal, & applied for an interim injunction pending the trial of the action:—Held: it was not a case for an interlocutory injunction.—*A.-G. v. 799. To restrain council pulling down new buildings—Unreasonable bye-law.]—Pltfs. made an alteration to their school building which consisted, in part, of an addition to the front of the house of a projection three stories high, with a room on each floor. This constituted a new domestic building within the meaning of the local bye-laws made before 1907, one of which provides that a person erecting a new domestic building “(a) . . . shall provide . . . in the rear an open space exclusively belonging to such building. . . . (b) Shall cause such open space to extend laterally throughout the entire width of such buildings. . . .” Defts. who were the local authority, threatened to pull down the new building because the above bye-law was not complied with. In an action for an injunction to restrain them from so doing:—Held: the bye-law was bad as being unreasonable as it unjustifiably interfered with the rights of property owners for no sufficient reason, or no reason at all, & pltfs. were entitled to an injunction.—*REPTON SCHOOL (GOVERNORS) v. 801. To restrain vicar & churchwardens acting upon faculty not yet granted.]—In 1782, a subscription was raised for the purpose of providing more church accommodation than then existed for the inhabitants of a parish, & a chapel was formed on the first floor of a building belonging to a grammar school. A curate was licensed to this chapel by the bishop of the diocese, & the curacy was constituted a perpetual curacy & benefice under Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1714 (c. 10), s. 4. Pews in this chapel were allotted to the subscribers, & the pewholders sold & transferred their seats by entries in the chapel-book. In 1846 the building was pulled down & a new chapel was erected on the site, & duly consecrated in 1848. Those persons who had been holders of pews in the old chapel had pews allotted to them in the new chapel in substitution therefor. These pews, & others which were substituted for them upon the re-pewing & repairing of the chapel under a faculty granted in 1867, were exclusively used by the persons to whom they were allotted & their successors in title down to the commencement of the action, & were dealt with by them by way of assignment & devise. The vicar & churchwardens of the parish having applied for a faculty to enable them to remove the pews, pltf., in whom the rights of the previous holders of three of the pews were vested, brought an action against them, claiming a declaration that he was entitled to the three pews, & an injunction to restrain defts. from interfering with them. There was no evidence of the pews having ever been repaired by pltf. or his predecessors in title:—Held: the action ought not to have been entertained, for it was an abuse of the process of the ct. to ask for an injunction to restrain defts. from acting under a faculty which had not yet been granted; but the Q. B. Div. having dealt with the matter, the ct. entertained the appeal.—PROUD v. PRICE (1893), 63 L. J. Q. B. 61; 69 L. T. 664; 42 W. R. 102; 10 T. L. R. 21; 9 R. 40, C. A.

802. To restrain governors of charity—Management of charity.]—The general controlling power of the ct. over charities does not extend to a charity regulated by governors under a charter, unless they have also the management of the revenues, & abuse their trust, which will not be presumed, but must be apparent or made out by evidence. The Foundling Hospital is an institution of this kind; therefore on motion injunction to restrain the governors from building round it refused, breach of trust or probability of it not being made out.—*A.-G. v. 804. ———.]—London University conferred upon pltf. a gold medal, as being the candidate who had obtained the highest number of marks in the examination of 1861 for the LL.D. degree. Two years afterwards, it was discovered by the Senate of the University, that, according to the construction put by the Senate on the remedy of the school committee was to move the ct. for an injunction to compel the board to cancel the appointments. Injunction regulations for the LL.D. examination, the examiners had miscarried in the mode which they had adopted in ascertaining the highest number of marks; & the Senate thereupon determined to confer a second gold medal upon the candidate to whom according to their view the medal ought to have been awarded. Pltf. filed his bill, alleging in effect that before becoming a candidate he made inquiry of the registrar of the University, & had been informed by him that the examination would be conducted upon the principle & the marks ascertained in the mode upon & in which they were in fact subsequently conducted & ascertained, & that he had become a candidate & paid his examination fee upon that footing, & praying that the University might be restrained from awarding such other medal:—Held: the ct. had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, the matter being one solely within the jurisdiction of the visitor; & even if the matter was one which might, in its nature, fall within the cognisance of the ct., pltf. had not alleged any sufficient ground of equity.—*THOMSON v. 807. Voluntary associations — Expulsion of member—Trade union.—The foundation of the jurisdiction of the ct. to prevent a member of a voluntary assocn. from being improperly expelled is the right of property vested in such member of which he is deprived.

The rules of a trade union provided that the money arising from the subscriptions of its members should be applicable in various ways for their benefit. They also purported to regulate the affairs of that trade, & provided that any journeyman binding his son in a "foul shop," being a shop in which non-union men were employed, should be fined, & not be entitled to any benefit until such fine had been paid. Pltf., a member of the union, who was alleged to have broken the rule as to apprenticeship, & who, having refused to pay the fine, had been expelled from the union, brought his action against the committee & trustees of the union claiming to be entitled to participate in its benefits, & that defts. might be restrained from excluding him from such participation:—Held: as the action was brought to enforce an agreement between members of a trade union "to provide benefits to members," within Trade Union Act, 1871 (c. 31), s. 4, which the ct. was not by that sect. enabled to enforce; & as, apart from the Act, the union was an illegal assocn., pltf. was not entitled to any relief.—*RIGBY v. 808. — Re-election of member—Stock Exchange.—The proprietors of the Stock Exchange are a voluntary association regulated by a deed of settlement, & the members are the persons from time to time admitted to attend, & in their own right to transact business at, the Stock Exchange in accordance with the deed.

In Mar. 1917, pltf., a naturalised British subject of German birth, who had been a member of the Stock Exchange since 1895, applied for re-election. Certain members, who had formed an organisation called the Stock Exchange Anti-German Union, lodged an objection under r. 35 [of the Stock Exchange Rules] against the re-election of pltf., on the ground of enemy birth. At the invitation of the committee pltf., showed cause against the objection by letter & at an interview, & he stated numerous facts in proof of his loyalty with a view to displacing the objection. The committee, however, refused his application. Pltf. brought an action to impugn the decision of the committee on the ground that it was arbitrary & capricious

b. Voluntary associations — Expulsion of member—Sports club.—To give jurisdiction to a ct. to interfere by way of injunction to restrain expulsion of a member of a club or assocn., it must appear that he has some right of property therein. The right to use the club or assocn. rooms, property & effects, on payment of a subscription, without any right to participate in assets, if distribution ensued, is merely a personal one. The only remedy in such case, if the expulsion is wrongful or injurious, is by action for damages. Where, therefore, an injunction was granted restraining a hockey assocn. from expelling a member, whereby he would be debarred from playing in a specified game, there being no allegation or proof of his having paid any subscription, or that he had any right of property in the assocn., injunction was set aside & action therefor dismissed with costs.—*Rowe v. The committee by their defence alleged that they did not re-elect pltf. because they did not deem him eligible to be a member of the Stock Exchange for the year in question & for no other reason:—Held: assuming the committee owed any duty to the members as regards re-election, the proper inference from the facts was that the refusal of the committee had proceeded solely on the ground of enemy birth, as to which pltf. had been heard; they had bonâ fide exercised the discretion conferred upon them by the deed of settlement & the rules, & were not shown to have acted arbitrarily or capriciously; & therefore the ct. had no jurisdiction to interfere with their decision.—WEINBERGER v. 811. —.——*—(1) The principle upon which this ct. interferes by injunction, in cases both of public & private nuisance, is the inadequacy of the remedy at common law; & it is on the ground of injury to property that this jurisdiction rests.

(2) A gas co. was incorporated by Act of Parliament for the purpose of supplying the town of S. with gas. Some years afterwards another co. was formed, & registered under the Joint Stock Companies Registration Act, 1844 (c. 110), for a like purpose, & commenced opening up the streets & highways of S. to lay down their pipes, etc., some of the inhabitants approving & some disapproving of the works. Upon an information & bill by the incorporated co., this ct. refused an injunction to restrain the new co. from continuing their works, the nuisance or damage being trivial.

(3) I confess, however, that, looking at the principles on which as I apprehend, this ct. interferes, it does not appear to me that there can be any sound distinction between cases of private & public nuisances. It is not on the ground of any criminal offence committed, or for the purpose of manufacturer sought to interdict a drysalter from putting paraffin oil into bottles belonging to the pursuer. The pursuer averred that bottles belonging to him, & marked with his name, were lent by him to his customers in the course of his trade, & were brought to defender by persons coming to purchase paraffin oil, & that, at their request, defender put paraffin oil into the bottles, in the knowledge that the bottles were the property of pursuer & that pursuer objected to such a practice since it injured them for use in his business:—Held: pursuer had relevantly averred participation by defender in a wrongful use of the pursuer's property, which, if proved, would form a good ground for interdict against him; & proof allowed.—WILSON v. SHEPHERD, [1913] S. C. 300.—SCOT.

i. —.———Penalty provided by statute.]—Pltf. by injunction sought to prevent the completion of a warehouse which deft. was erecting on ground leased by him from a railway co., being part of their right of way adjoining the lawn of a property owned & occupied by pltf. as a dwelling in W. It was being constructed of wood in contravention of the fire limit by-law of the city:—Held: pltf. had no right to enforce the fire limit by-law by injunction, as it was a bye-law passed for the protection of the general public & providing for a penalty in case of its infringement, & there was no evidence to show that the risk giving a better remedy in the case of a criminal offence, that this ct. is or can be called on to interfere. It is on the ground of injury to property that the jurisdiction of this ct. must rest; & taking it to rest upon that ground, the only distinction which seems to me to exist between cases of public nuisance & private nuisance is this: that in cases of private nuisance the injury is to individual property, & in cases of public nuisance the injury is to the property of mankind (TURNER, L.J.).

(4) One point suggested against the informant & plffs. is that of acquiescence or laches. I think no such point established. Early & speedily after the first announcement of defts.' project, plffs. protested against it openly & publicly, & they have uniformly declared & asserted their opposition to it. Whether this suit was instituted soon enough to entitle the informant & plffs. to an interlocutory order for an injunction may be disputable, but it was commenced, I think, soon enough to warrant them in asking for a decree. . . . The expenditure of defts. has taken place under full notice that it was objected to, & that endeavours were, & would be, in active operation to render it fruitless & useless (KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J.).

(5) That delay will affect the Attorney-General as much as a private individual I am not prepared to say; but, in my opinion it is a circumstance to be considered in determining the question whether this Court shall interfere (TURNER, L.J.).—A.-G. v. By the arts. of assocn., which adopted the contract, it was provided that a director should vacate his office if he did not acquire a qualification within a month of his appointment or election, & that the qualification of a managing director should be the holding in his own right shares of the nominal value of £25,000. B. provided for pltf. shares to the amount of £5,000, & died in Aug. 1888. Pltf., who was one of his exors., & his co-exors. in Oct. 1888, transferred shares to the amount of £20,000 into pltf.'s name to complete his qualification as a managing director; but the estate had not been administered, & there was no evidence under what circumstances the shares were transferred to him or whether he was beneficially entitled to them.

The board of directors refused to recognise pltf. as a director on the ground that he had not sufficient qualification, & he brought an action to restrain them from excluding him, & moved for an interim injunction:—Held: in the absence of evidence as to the beneficial interest in the shares transferred to pltf. the ct. could not decide whether he was the holder of the shares "in his own right" within the meaning of the articles, until the estate had been administered. Afterwards, an extraordinary meeting of the shareholders having, at the instance of the ct., been held & a resolution having been passed that even if pltf. was duly qualified they did not desire him to act as a managing director, the ct. declined to interfere with the decision of the shareholders, & refused the injunction.—RAINBRIDGE v. The works manager of a co. manufacturing rubber goods & rubber compounds was entrusted with the care of a book of formulæ of secret processes for the purpose of carrying out his duties. On leaving the co.'s employment he took this book away with him & shortly afterwards entered the employ of a rival co. 839. ——— Secret process.]—An ex-servant who has been confidentially employed in the manufacture of an article under a secret process is under an implied obligation to his late master not to use or disclose any knowledge or information as to that secret process acquired by him during his employment. The principle applies to information acquired & retained in the servant's memory as well as to information committed to writing & existing in a tangible form.

Where the ct. is satisfied that there is a secret process & that the ex-servant has learnt a material part of it during his employment & has made an improper use of the knowledge so obtained it can grant an injunction although the actual details of the secret process are not disclosed to the ct. at the trial.—*AMBER SIZE & CHEMICAL CO., LTD. v. Chattel acquired under abuse of fiduciary relationship.—The jurisdiction to protect by injunction the possession, & to decree the delivery up, of specific chattels, is not confined to chattels, the loss or injury of which would not be adequately compensated by damages, but extends to all cases in which the party in possession of the chattels has acquired such possession, through an alleged abuse of power on the part of one standing in a fiduciary relation to pltf.—*WOOD v. The ct. after examining the letters refused to grant interdict.—WHITE v. DICKSON (1881), 8 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 896 ; 18 Sc. L. R. 651.—SCOT.

It was not alleged by appets. that the publication of the letters would entail irreparable damage to them :—Held : the application must be refused. Where the writer of a letter has allowed it to pass out of his possession without restriction as to its circulation, he has no right on which to found an application to restrain the publication of such letter.—*NELSON & MEURANT v. to New Zealand, & on her arrival there was surveyed & pronounced not seaworthy. The master was unable, either by loan or bottomry, to raise money for her repair, & he at length sold the ship to pltf., & on receiving payment of the purchase-money by a bill of exchange in London, executed to them a bill of sale of the ship. Pltfs. repaired the ship & sent her to England with a cargo. Defts. refused to ratify the sale or consent to the registry of the ship in pltf.' name &, on the arrival of the ship in the port of London, defts. put several men on board to take possession of the ship & cargo for them. Pltfs. thereupon applied for an injunction to restrain defts. from interfering with the ship or removing her out of the jurisdiction, & for a manager & receiver of the ship & cargo:—Held: pltf. had no equitable, as distinct from a legal, title to the ship, & inasmuch as their title, if they had acquired any, was a purely legal one, & the case of interference, if wrongful, was, therefore, a mere trespass, the ct. would not interfere in favour of pltf.' by injunction. Pltfs., according to the case made on the motion, if they failed at the hearing to establish their right to the ship, would be entitled to equitable relief in respect of the bill of exchange given for the purchase-money; & they were entitled to have the trial of the legal right put in a course for determination, & to have the property protected in the meantime.

Semble: in such a case, independently of the relief in respect of the bill of exchange, if engagements had been contracted of which the conduct of defts. would prevent the fulfilment, & if there could be no adequate compensation to pltf. in damages, or if defts. were about to carry away or destroy the property, the ct. might interfere by injunction.—*RIDGWAY v. The judgment recovered by pltf. was founded on an agreement of guarantee, which was in existence at the time of the impeached transfers of shares. Deft. asserted that the shares were her property, that her husband was a trustee for her, & that the transfers were made pursuant to her demand:—Held: as to a portion of the shares, which appeared to have been bought with deft.'s money, pltf. had not shown such a reasonable probability of their succeeding in the action as to justify the ct. in interfering with the property before trial, but as to other shares, there was probably a question whether the transfer was not an attempt at a gift, without such a delivery of possession as would be necessary to effectuate it, & as to these shares there were reasonable grounds for pltf.'s action; pltf. had not so

On a bill by one proprietor on behalf of himself & the others, the comrs. were restrained by injunction from proceeding in an agreement made by them for the sale of a pond by private contract to a person who was not the owner of any property adjoining or fronting the pond, it appearing that the pond was of much public utility & was sold at an undervalue.—*HAWES v. He also agreed to give possession to the purchaser on the day the instrument was executed. The vendor having repudiated the agreement, the purchaser, at a time when the vendor had completed the ten years' term of residence, brought an action against the vendor claiming an injunction restraining him from dealing with the land except in accordance with the agreement:—Held: the possession agreed to be given must be construed to mean such a possession as was consistent with a true residence by the vendor on the land as his home, there was no attempted evasion of the Crown Lands Acts, & the purchaser was entitled to an injunction & to a decree for specific performance.—*WALSH v. 878. Property deposited in bank pending action.]—Proceedings had been taken in the Ch. Div. to set aside a devise to deft. on the ground that the execution of the will had been procured by deft.'s fraud, & such proceedings had ended in favour of deft. Pltf. then commenced an action for revocation of probate. The property in dispute had been deposited at a bank pending the chancery action, & the bankers informed pltf. that they should hand it over to deft. within a week, if not restrained by a competent authority. Pltf. was unable to effect service of notice of application for the appointment of an administrator pendente lite. By a subsequent deed, the son being at the time insolvent, the father & son revoked the old uses in favour of the son, & appointed the estate to such uses as the father should appoint, & in default of appointment to the use of the son absolutely. The son was afterwards adjudicated bkpt., & a bill was filed by the creditor's assignees to set aside the latter deed as fraudulent. Upon a motion in the cause an injunction was granted, restraining the father until the hearing from exercising his power under the deed in favour of a purchaser for value, but without interfering with the exercise of his power in favour of volunteers.—BEYFUS v. 884. Settled land—Injunction against tenant for life—Till trustees appointed against assignee in bankruptcy.]—J. by his will devised an estate to trustees upon trust to receive & pay the rents to his grandson for life, & after his decease to sell & to stand possessed of the moneys for all the grandson's children. The tenant for life was upwards of seventy years of age, & a widower. He had one child only, a daughter, & she & her husband in July, 1880, contracted to sell her reversion in the estate to pltf. Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), came into operation in Jan. 1883, & the tenant for life at the end of that month advertised the estate for sale under the powers of the Act. Pltf. brought an action for an injunction to restrain the tenant for life from selling; & to restrain the other defts., devisees of the legal estate under the will of the survivor of trustees of J.'s will appointed by the ct., from executing any assurance of the estate, & on motion for that purpose:—Held: (1) the tenant for life had power under Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), to sell the fee simple & inheritance of the property if he should comply with the provisions of the Act; (2) there were no trustees to whom he could, under sect. 45, give notice; & an injunction was granted to restrain him from selling until trustees had been properly appointed for the purposes of the Act.—*WHEELWRIGHT v. 888. Violation of political privileges.]—(1) Deft., K., a Hungarian refugee, caused to be manufactured in England a large quantity of notes, which though not made in imitation of any notes circulating in Hungary, purported to be receivable as money in every Hungarian State & public pay office, & to be guaranteed by the State of Hungary. Pltf., as King of Hungary, sued to have these notes delivered up & to restrain the manufacture of any such, alleging that the issue of such notes would injure the rights of pltf. by promoting revolution & disorder, would injure the State by the introduction of a spurious circulation, & would thereby also injure pltf.'s subjects:—Held: although the ct. has not any jurisdiction to restrain the commission of acts which only violate the political privileges of a foreign sovereign, the manufacture of these notes ought to be restrained.

(2) But it is said that the acts proposed to be done are not the subject of equitable jurisdiction, or that if they are, the jurisdiction ought not to be exercised until a trial at law shall have been had. To neither of these propositions can I give my assent. I agree that the jurisdiction of this ct. in a case of this nature rests upon injury to property actual or prospective, & that this ct. has no jurisdiction to prevent the commission of acts which are merely criminal or merely illegal, & do not affect any rights of property (TURNER, L.J.).—*AUSTRIA (EMPEROR) v. Pltfs. alleged that this act of deft. had caused them great inconvenience & annoyance, & had materially diminished the value of their property, & they claimed an injunction to restrain deft. from continuing to use the name of their house:—Held: the alleged act of deft. in calling his house by the name of pltfs.' house was not a violation of any legal right of pltfs.; & there being no allegation of malicious intention, a demurrer to the statement of claim was allowed.

PART X. SECT. 14, SUB-SECT. 1.—B.

901 i. Use of name to advertise commodity.—Pltf. co. was incorporated in Canada, under the name of the "Gramm Motor Truck Co.," in 1910, for the purpose of supplying motor trucks for the carriage of goods. "Gramm" was the name of a citizen of the United States who had planned the construction of a motor truck distinct from other like trucks called by the names of their designers in the United States. Pltf. co. did not manufacture trucks, in the strict sense of the word, nor did they bring in machines from the United States, but they procured from an American co. with which Gramm was connected, called the "Gramm Motor Co. of Lima," & from other sources, separate parts, assembled them on their premises in Ontario, & put them on the market as finished products. The use of Gramm's name by pltf. co. was sanctioned by him. Pltf. co. developed many variations & improvements in the method of combination, advertised largely, & established a recognised business of selling motor trucks in Canada under the trade name "Gramm," & the word became associated with their business, their trucks being known as "Gramm Motor Trucks." Deft. co. started business in the town where pltf. co.'s place of business was, across the street from it, & gave themselves out as entitled to sell Gramm motors, justifying under an arrangement with the "Gramm-Bernstein Co.," doing business in the United States, & exhibiting "Gramm-Bernstein" motors in their own name:—Held: deft. co. should be enjoined from the use of the word "Gramm" in labelling & advertising their motors.—GRAMM MOTOR TRUCK Co. v. FISHER MOTOR Co. (1913), 5 O. W. N. 449; 30 O. L. R. 1.—CAN.

P. & Co., Savile Row, London, W., & is therefore in a position to advise clients in the very latest styles, uniformity, & fit in fashionable & smart clothing." Such statements even if false are puffing assertions, which cannot be restrained at the suit of a private person, unless it appears that they tend to the passing off of one man's goods or business as another's, or amount to a holding out of pltf. as a partner, so exposing him to liability, or tend to disparage pltf.'s goods, & cause special damage.—CUNDEY v. A ct. of equity will not, at the instance of a shareholder, restrain a joint stock co., incorporated by Acts of Parliament which prescribe its constitution & objects, from applying in its corporate capacity to Parliament, & from using its corporate seal & resources to obtain the sanction of the legislature to the remodelling of its constitution, or to a material alteration & extension of its object & powers. 914. —.]—A ct. of equity has jurisdiction, if a proper case connected with private property or interest be made, to restrain a party by injunction from petitioning against a bill in Parliament. The S. ry. co. being leased to the C. Co., entered into an agreement for the sale of their railway to the L. Co., & it was a term of the agreement, that the purchase should be completed three weeks after an Act had passed for permitting the L. to amalgamate with the C. ry. co. It did not appear that any definite agreement was concluded between the C. & the L. co., but it was understood that a bill should be presented by the C. co. for the amalgamation of the two cos. The bill was presented & passed the Commons without opposition, but in the Lords the L. co. presented a petition against the bill. The S. co., fearing that if this Act did not pass, they would lose the benefit of their contract, filed a bill against the two other cos., praying an injunction to restrain the L. co. from opposing the bill in Parliament, & also specific performance of the agreement:—Held: the S. co. had not made out such a case as to induce a ct. of equity to exercise its jurisdiction by injunction.—*STOCKTON & HARTLEPOOL RY. A landowner withdrew his opposition to a bill before Parliament, on the faith of an agreement with the railway co., that they should in the next session of Parliament apply for an Act authorising the formation of a branch railway to certain works belonging to such landowner. The co. obtained an Act in the following session, but afterward gave notice of their intention to apply for another Act,

The judge refused the motion on the ground that after so long a delay, this ct. would not grant an injunction in the first instance, but directed it to stand over, with liberty to pltfs. to bring such action as they might be advised. Pltfs. commenced proceedings at law, but in the meantime published in the newspapers & circulated as handbills amongst the trade, a report of the hearing of the motion, in which it was stated that “it was established in evidence that pltfs. were the first persons in this country to use the words” in question. No evidence whatever was gone into upon that occasion; & on this ground, as well as because the report would have the effect of prepossessing the public mind, & obstructing the course of justice during the litigation, defts. moved for an injunction to restrain the publication. The motion having been refused, was renewed before the Lords Justices:—Held: although the ct. possessed the power of preventing the publication of its proceedings pending litigation it could not undertake to restrain every report published in the columns of a newspaper, which might appear to be unfair in any respect. able waste, refused, under the special circumstances of the case. Semble: although a man be in full & complete possession of an estate by a title adverse to another who claims it against him, & there be no privity between the parties, & the party in possession swear that his own title is just & valid, or that the title of his adversary is unjust & invalid, that state of things does not prevent a ct. of equity from interfering, before judgment at law or decree in equity, to restrain the party in possession from committing a waste upon the inheritance.—*HAIGH v. parties in possession. (2) Nor will it interfere, at the like instances, to restrain waste, except malicious or destructive waste, e.g. by pulling down the capital messuage, stripping the estate of its timber, or other like acts, which no owner would do, or which would destroy the property before they could be arrested at law. Pltf. sought to restrain him from so doing:—Held: this mode of cultivation was not prohibited by the express provisions of the lease, & whether it did or did not amount technically to waste, it was "meliorating" waste, in respect of which an injunction ought not to be granted, & the action was dismissed with costs.—*MEUX v. An Act of Parliament passed in 1853 recited that the bishop of D. & the public body respectively claimed this & other land, & that litigation having taken place between them, but without any decision, they were desirous of preventing further litigation & of giving up their interests in the property; & by the Act the property was vested in a corpn. managing the S. orphan asylum, freed from all claims of the bishop & of the public body, "but subject to the existing leases of the same hereditaments or any part thereof." In 1911 the lease of 1844 was assigned to certain river comrs. who proposed to connect the demised property with their quay by a railway which was to pass through a retaining wall on the property & along a cutting to be made thereon. These works involved the pulling down of part of the wall, & of two small buildings on the land which had been erected subsequently to the date of the lease. These works would, however, rather improve the property than not:—Held: the covenant to repair was not a general covenant to repair, but one which only concerned the particular premises mentioned, & therefore did not include buildings erected after the date of the lease, & having regard to the term having twenty-seven years still to run, any damages recoverable by the reversioners for the alteration in wall would be only nominal, & having regard to these things, & to the fact that the covenant sought to be enforced was an affirmative & not a negative covenant, & the waste complained of was ameliorating waste, an injunction at the suit of the asylum to restrain the comrs. from carrying out their proposals would not be granted.—*SUNDERLAND ORPHAN ASYLUM v. B. Criminal Proceedings.

954. Jurisdiction of court—To restrain proceedings—At suit of Crown.]—Pltfs. claiming an exclusive right of fishery, brought their bill to be quieted in the possession of it, & to prevent multiplicity of actions. Defts. by answer insist on a custom they have of fishing on the borders of their land. Pending the suit, pltfs. indict several persons in the ct. of sessions for the city of York for fishing under an authority from defts.; & now, upon affidavit that the mayor & aldermen, pltfs., are in commission of the peace for York, & consequently would be judges of their own case, defts. moved for an injunction to stay proceedings on these indictments:—Held: though this ct. cannot grant an injunction to stay a criminal proceeding at the suit of the Crown, so as to restrain the A.-G., yet as this is an indictment for trespass in which was no violence, & is to try a civil right, which is the subject of an action, it can order prosecutor, who is pltf. now before the ct., not to proceed.—*YORK CORPN. v. 958. To restrain proceedings for recovery of penalty.]—A ct. of equity has no jurisdiction to restrain criminal proceedings for the recovery of a penalty imposed by an Act of Parliament for a breach of its enactments. A board having statutory power to consent in writing to a particular act is not bound by tacit acquiescence. Pltfs., owners of a house & area situate in & fronting a street, altered the front of the house by throwing out bay windows projecting beyond the street line of frontage but not beyond the limits of the area. After the completion of the alterations defts., the local authority threatened pltfs. with summary proceedings before the justices for the recovery of penalties under the Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), on the ground that pltfs. had set forward their building without the written consent of defts. under sect. 156 of the Act. Pltfs. then moved ex p. for an injunction to restrain defts. from taking these proceedings, alleging: (a) as the alterations had been made over their own property defts. in threatening proceedings were acting ultra vires; (b) defts. having had notice of pltfs.' intention to make the alterations were bound by acquiescence; (c) the justices had no jurisdiction as defts. had not made their complaint within six

n. Court of Conciliation & Arbitration.]—An agreement was made by an organisation of employees with an employer that it would not make any further claims on the employer in relation to industrial matters for a period of three years. Within that time the organisation commenced proceedings in the Commonwealth Ct. of Conciliation & Arbitration in which further demands were made on the employer in relation to industrial matters:—Held: the High Ct. had jurisdiction by injunction to restrain the organisation from instituting such proceedings.—WILLIAMSON (J. FEDERATED ENGINE DRIVERS & FIREMEN'S ASSOCN. (1913), 17 C. L. R. 261.—AUS.

p. Unauthorised proceedings.]—The principle that where a special tribunal for the determination of any matter exists, the ct. should not, as a rule, interfere by injunction, is inapplicable where the injunction is

q. Stewards of racing club.]—On a motion to rescind an interim injunction:—Held: the principles as to pecuniary interest which apply to ordinary judicial bodies are not applicable to the stewards of a racing club; such stewards constitute a peculiar & special tribunal, to which, to the knowledge of parties who, by racing under its rules, have accepted such tribunal, considerations & conditions apply which do not exist in ordinary judicial bodies; the possibility that the stewards have to decide matters in which the interests of the Jockey Club are involved must have been anticipated by the parties; such an interest does not preclude the stewards from considering & deciding a protest. Pltf. obtained an order for a receiver, & before the receiver was appointed, proceeded to cut timber upon the estate. In pursuance of this Act a contract was entered into between Her Majesty & two of defts., & the contractors thereupon proceeded to build the road. Pltf., being aware that the route contemplated would cross certain lands, purchased them with a view of obstructing the building of the road. It was not contended that this would disentitle him to an injunction, but it was alleged that he was acting not for himself but in reality for a rival railway whose hand he was. To show this, pltf. was examined & he refused to answer several proper & material questions. He appeared to have acted through the rival railway's officials & to have reported progress to them; to have made some agreements with that co., giving to it certain privileges in respect of the land purchased, but the nature of this agreement he refused to divulge; & in a letter he referred to "the party for whom I have purchased":—Held: pltf. was not entitled to an injunction, he being the representative merely of the rival railway & not acting on his own behalf.—*BROWNING v. A firm of shipowners, who let out steamers on excursion trips, & who paid rates to the trustees for the use of the harbour, brought an action of interdict to restrain the trustees from so using their steamers:—Held: as harbour ratepayers the shipowners had a good title & interest to sue.—*DUNDEE HARBOUR TRUSTEES v. b. Adding plaintiff at trial.]—A patentee assigned part of his interest to pltf., who alone filed a bill to restrain the infringement of the patent. At the hearing an objection was taken that the patentee was not a party to the suit; but he, by his counsel, appearing & consenting to be named as a pltf. & to be bound by the proceedings in the cause, an amendment in that respect was directed by the decree to be made, & relief granted as prayed.—*YATES v. permitting sewage to be discharged into the canal, & for an inquiry as to damages:—Held: the A.-G. was justified in taking proceedings at the relation of pltf., & pltf. was entitled to an injunction & an inquiry as to damages, although he had permitted an obstruction to remain in the canal whereby the sewage was prevented from being carried away by the flow of the water.—A.-G. & DOMMES v. A district council, the board's successors, commenced an action, & delivered a statement of claim alleging that the co. had committed breaches of the Act, & claiming that it should be ordered to keep its mains under pressure, & should be restrained by injunction from supplying water not properly filtered:—Held: (1) the action was one which was not maintainable by the council alone, & the A.-G. was a necessary pltf.; (2) the terms of giving leave to join the A.-G. ought to be that the council should pay the costs of the action up to the time of & including those of joining him as co-pltf.—A.-G. v. The co. entered, & were proceeding to make their line in a manner which clearly exceeded their powers of vertical deviation. Therefore, where a waterworks Act empowered a co. to divert the water of a stream, without limit as to quantity, by means of an open channel filled with loose stones, & they were diverting it by means of a culvert:—Held: another co. who were entitled to the water of a stream into which the diverted stream had flowed were not entitled to an injunction to restrain a violation of the terms of the Act as to the mode of diversion.—LIVERPOOL CORPN. v. Defts. proposed opening their main line before the completion of the junction:—Held: pltfs. had a sufficient interest to entitle them to an injunction to prevent this proceeding, & it was not necessary to resort to an information for that purpose, & an injunction was granted, although the delay in opening the main line might be prejudicial to the public.—CROM-

No ct. can remodel arrangements sanctioned, or relax conditions imposed by Act of Parliament.

A local Act empowered comrs. to take water from a river for the supply of a township on condition of their executing certain works & (inter alia) a reservoir to supply compensation water to mill owners & a conduit, the reservoir to be constructed by an embankment across the river. The Act & the relative plans & sections described the position of the reservoir, its contour & capacity, & the height of the embankment & provided that in constructing the authorised works the comrs. might subject to the provisions of the Act deviate from the lines of the works to any extent not exceeding the limits of lateral deviation shown on the deposited plans & from the levels shown on the deposited sections, in the case of the reservoir to any extent of lesser height which would enable the comrs. to give a sufficient supply of water for compensation purposes; but the comrs. should not in the exercise of the power of lateral deviation thereby given construct any embankment or wall of any reservoir of a greater height above the general surface of the ground than that shown on the plans with reference to the corresponding embankment or wall & 6 feet in addition. In constructing the reservoir the comrs. curtailed it by more than one-third of its length & nearly two-thirds of its capacity & placed the embankment higher up the river than the point fixed by the Act & so that the capacity could not be enlarged in the event of the supply of compensation water proving insufficient. In constructing the conduit the comrs. disregarded in material points the directions of the Act as to the course & serviceableness of the conduit & constructed a conduit which they alleged was "a substantial equivalent" to the mill owners. The mill owners having brought an action against the comrs.:—Held: though no actual damage was proved the mill owners were entitled to a declaration that the reservoir & conduit were not in accordance with the provisions of the Act, & to an injunction restraining the comrs. from taking or using the waters of the river or from interfering with the flow of the river otherwise than as authorised by the Act.—HERRON v. Certain accommodation provided for by the regulations, such as the appropriation of particular berths at the option of any shipowner upon certain specified terms, were in excess of what was required by statute to be provided by the dock co., & certain rates & charges imposed by them were beyond the co.’s statutory powers. A firm of shipowners which, prior to the issue of the regulations, had been in the habit of using the docks & having particular berths appropriated for their ships, finding that the terms imposed by regulations for such accommodation caused them inconvenience & increased expense, brought an action, by themselves as individuals, against the dock co., for a declaration that the regulations were altogether invalid until confirmed as required by statute, & also an injunction by way of consequential relief; a trade protection assocn. of shipowners, of which the firm & other shipowners were members, but which owned no ships themselves, being made co-pltfs.:—Held: (1) pltf. assocn. had no locus standi, not being themselves shipowners, & not being entitled to sue as agent for their members; & (2) pltf. firm, suing as individuals, & not by the A.-G. as representing the public, were bound to prove special damage by the issue of the regulations, & this they had failed to do, inasmuch as any accommodation provided by the dock co. beyond the statutory requirement must be a matter of agreement between the firm & the dock co.—*LONDON ASSOCN. The declaration alleged that defts. wrongfully & fraudulently, & for the purpose of evading a [private] Act opened a railway from the station at Grange-lane to & to communicate with the shore of the Mersey, in the township of Birkenhead, between Woodside Ferry & Birkenhead Ferry, & near Woodside Ferry, & conveyed passengers & merchandise along the same to the station at Grange-lane, although no branch railway had been made from the main line to Tranmere Ferry, in contempt of the Act of Parliament & to pltf.’s damage of £20,000. On a general demurrer:—Held: the declaration was bad as it did not contain any averment that defts.

made a railway to or to communicate with Woodside Ferry, or anything necessarily equivalent to such an averment. But if it had contained such an averment, the action might have been sustained without any allegation of special damage, the act prohibited not being one merely affecting the public, but an act obviously prohibited for the protection of one particular individual.—*CHAMBERLAINE v. SECT. 2.—THE APPLICATION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—BY ACTION.

A. In General.

1001. Indorsement of claim on writ—Necessity for.]—Pltf. should indorse his writ with a claim for an injunction or receiver when the obtaining of either is a substantial object of his action.

A. & B. were entitled under a will to certain personalty in equal shares. A., as sole exor. of testator, advertised part of the personalty for sale, & intended, it was stated, to go abroad. B., thereupon, brought an action asking in the indorsement of the writ for administration only:—Held: on an ex p. application, B. might amend the indorsement by asking for a receiver & for an injunction to restrain the intended sale.—COLEBOURNE v. COLEBOURNE (1876), 1 Ch. D. 690; 45 L. J. Ch. 749; 24 W. R. 235; 2 Char. Pr. Cas. 197.

1002. — Particulars.]—Re MYERS' PATENT (1882), 26 Sol. Jo. 371, C. A.

1003. Where injunction not specifically claimed—Leave to amend granted.]—Order for amendment without costs, requiring no further answer; the amendment was, by inserting prayer for injunction:—Held: deft. might answer. Proper injunction cannot be granted, unless expressly prayed by the bill.—SAVORY v. DYER (1749), Amb. 70; 27 E. R. 41, L. C.

Court may grant—At hearing.]—Devise to A. & her heirs for ever, "in the fullest confidence, that after her decease she will devise the property to my family," being restrained to an estate for life by decree at the Rolls, the devisee was enjoined from cutting timber pending an appeal.

With regard to the injunction there is a distinction upon the practice; generally, if the bill does not pray an injunction, pltf. cannot move for an injunction under the prayer for general relief; but if, after a decree for an account under a bill for foreclosure, the mtgor. attempted to cut timber, the ct. would enjoin him, though there was no prayer for that (LORD ELDON, C.).—WRIGHT v. ATKYNS (1818), 1 Ves. & B. 313; 35 E. R. 122, L. C.

1007. — — — — —.]—On looking at the prayer of the bill I do not find that it distinctly & specifically prays to restrain deft. from setting up any outstanding legal estate; but nevertheless I think that it is quite clear the whole object of the proceeding would be defeated if any such outstanding term could be set up. I must consider this case as one of the few exceptions which there are to the rule that in order to obtain an injunction there must be a distinct prayer for it in the bill (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—*BLOMFIELD v. to purpose of injunction.]—Action to restrain defts. from interfering with or removing a fence alleged by pltf. to be the western boundary of lot 26 of which lot they were the owners. Defts. by counter-claim asked that pltf. be ordered to remove the fence:—Held: both parties had failed to prove the location of the western boundary of lot 26, & that onus was on pltf. —*LAKE ERIE EXCURSION CO. v. k. Necessity for filing of bill.]—A notice of motion for partition having been served, pltf. moved for an injunction restraining deft. from collecting rents & for a receiver. It appeared that deft. was a stranger whose right to be in possession was denied:—Held: that no relief could be had against him without bill filed.—v. WRIGHT (1879), 8 P. R. 198.

l. — — — Unless urgent.]—An injunction will not be granted on affidavits without bill, unless it appears that there is urgent necessity for it.—GOSLIN v. GOSLIN (1888), 27 N. B. R. 221.—CAN.]

m. Where application & bill inconsistent.]—An injunction was refused, the allegation & prayer of the bill having been framed with a view to relief on other grounds than those upon which the application was founded, although the affidavits in support of it would warrant the injunction.—*ELY v. o. When only injunction applied for—Or with further relief.]—Where an injunction only is claimed, the proceedings must be by motion under rr. 456 & 457 of the Code. If an injunction is claimed with further or other relief the case comes under r. 463, & the proceeding may be by writ & trial in the ordinary course.—MANSFORD v. ROSS (1886), 4 N. Z. L. R. 290 (S. p. — — — No other remedy—Power to amend application.]—No relief beyond the issue of an injunction & costs can be claimed in a statement of claim for an injunction filed & served without writ under rr. 452 & 456. The ct. has power to amend in such a case under r. 285; & pltf. was allowed to amend by abandoning a claim for relief other than the injunction.—COLEGROVE v. YOUNG (1902), 22 N. Z. L. R. 491.—N.Z.

q. Absence of defendant—Effect of—Grounds for application inadequate.]—Where defts. did not appear upon a notice of motion for injunction, the ct. directed the writ to issue, although entertaining great doubt whether a sufficient foundation for the interposition of the ct. had been laid.—DENNISON

r. Plea of defendant—Whether requisite.]—When a party applies to the ct. to prevent another from doing an act which will be injurious to his rights, the injunction asked for ought not to require the other party to plead.—BEAMISH v. HALIFAX CITY (1857), 2 Thom. 227.—CAN.

t. What court will decide—Not question of title.]—The ct. will not, as a general rule, decide a question of title upon a writ of injunction, more especially when there is a third party interested who is not a party in the cause.—*GILMOUR v. 1009. With action for recovery of land—Whether joinder possible.]—Leave was given to join with an action for the recovery of land three other claims, namely, for an injunction against one of defts. receiving the rents & profits, for the appointment of a receiver of the rents & profits, & for the delivery up & cancellation of a deed under which the same deft. claimed to be entitled.—COOK v. Before the statement of claim had been delivered, defts. moved to set aside the writ upon the ground that pltf. had not, before issue thereof, obtained leave for the joinder of the cause of action for the injunction with the cause of action for the recovery of land:—Held: though a perpetual injunction, if claimed by the statement of claim, when delivered, might possibly be inconsistent with the terms of R. S. C., Ord. 18, r. 2, an interlocutory injunction, being only a substitute for damages between the issue of the writ & the trial, was not inconsistent with such rule; & upon the face of the writ there was no infringement of the rule, & the motion must be refused.—READ v. WOTTON, [1893] 2 Ch. 171; 62 L. J. Ch. 481; 68 L. T. 209; 41 W. R. 556; 37 Sol. Jo. 285; 3 R. 374.

1014. ———.]—Pltfs. by their writ claimed possession of premises comprised in a lease, damages for breach of covenants contained in the lease, & an interim injunction; & served a notice of motion for an injunction to restrain defts. from erecting or permitting to remain erected certain lettering then erected on the front of the premises in breach of the covenants contained in the lease. The breach of covenant by deft. responsible for the breach was admitted, but since the notice of motion was served the breach of covenant had been remedied:—Held: the issue of the writ to recover possession was an unequivocal determination of the lease on the part of pltfs. & that it was not open to them to move for an injunction on the footing that the lease was still subsisting, & pltfs. must pay the costs of the motion.—WHEELER v. 1025. ———.]—After service of subpoena & the appearance of deft., a motion for an injunction cannot be made ex p. Where, in an injunction suit, pltf. moved before answer that the bill might be dismissed & that defts. might pay the costs of the suit, on the ground that the suit was occasioned by their wrongful act, & that all the purposes of it had been attained by the motion for an injunction, the ct., although considering such an application reasonable, declined to introduce a new practice by making the order.—*LANGHAM v. 1026. Appearance without service.—Where a deft., not having been served with a subpoena, has, nevertheless, appeared several days before an application is made for an injunction, it is difficult to say he ought not to be served with notice of motion, whatever be the nature of the mischief apprehended. Deft. having become aware that a bill has been filed, & of course having also become aware of the object of that bill, the delay in making the application shows that pltf. could not think the danger arising from notice very great.—MANSFIELD v. SHORT (1818), 2 Coop. temp. Cott. 169; 47 E. R. 1108.

1027. ———.]—I am of opinion that except the mischief threatened be irreparable, for instance, the cutting down of ornamental timber & the like, no injunction ought to be granted, even after a gratis appearance, as it is called, unless upon notice. There is already too great a facility to obtain ex p. injunctions (LEACH, V.C.).—LEWIS v. LANGHAM (1835), 2 Coop. temp. Cott. 170; 47 E. R. 1108.

1028. ——— & service of notice of motion.—C. having, through D., his agent, agreed to sell a property to F., G., alleging a prior contract for sale to himself, commenced an action against C., D., & F. for specific performance, & in default, for damages against C. & D., & obtained an interlocutory injunction restraining C. & F. from completing the sale, G. giving the usual undertaking as to damages, the judge held that no contract had been entered into with G., & dismissed the claim with costs as against F., but as against C. & D. without costs, considering the conduct of D. blamable, & refused to give any inquiry as to damages. C. & D. appealed, on the ground that the dismissal ought to have been with costs, & that an inquiry as to damages ought to have been granted. G. presented a cross appeal asking for damages against C. & D.:—(1) C. was entitled to damages under the undertaking, for that, unless under special circumstances, effect ought to be given to such an undertaking when an injunction turns out to have been wrongly granted, but that in the present case, as the only possible damage was that C. had been delayed in receiving the purchase-money, an inquiry would not be directed, but C. should receive from pltf. interest at £5 per cent. on the purchase money, minus any interest actually made by him, the amount to be verified by affidavit; (2) C. & D. were entitled to the costs of both appeals, but that although C.'s appeal was not for costs alone, & by reason of that fact & of the cross appeal the whole case had been heard, the ct. was not at liberty to vary the order of the ct. below as to costs; (3) where a deft. has had notice of motion for an injunction, it is improper to grant an injunction against him ex p. though the pressure of business may be such as to prevent the motion on notice from being brought on.

(4) An interlocutory injunction ought to be made upon an undertaking for damages.—GRAHAM v. CAMPBELL (1878), 7 Ch. D. 490; 47 L. J. Ch. 593; 38 L. T. 195; 26 W. R. 336, C. A.

Where it was stated in the order for an injunction that notice had been served on defts., & in the affidavit that it was served on the persons acting as solrs. to defts., the order was discharged for irregularity. 1086. “Until further order” —Meaning of.—Where an interim injunction is granted over the next motion day or until further order it signifies that the injunction may be dissolved before the day fixed, but cannot be extended beyond that period except with the leave of the ct.—BOLTON v. LONDON SCHOOL BOARD (1878), 7 Ch. D. 766; 47 L. J. Ch. 461; 38 L. T. 277; 42 J. P. 647; 26 W. R. 549.

SUB-SECT. 7.—INTERIM ORDER IN NATURE OF INJUNCTION.

Interlocutory injunction.—See Part III., ante.

1082. Nature of interim order.—Where an interim order in the nature of an injunction ex p. is applied for & granted, but it appears upon the regular hearing of the motion for an injunction, that the statement upon which the order was obtained did not contain a full disclosure of material circumstances, the ct. will make such order as to the costs of the parties as will show its sense of the impropriety of such a proceeding.—FULLER v. TAYLOR (1863), 32 L. J. Ch. 376; 8 L. T. 69; 9 Jur. N. S. 743; 11 W. R. 532.

1083. The application—Necessity for full disclosure of facts.—FULLER v. TAYLOR, No. 1082, ante.

1084. — When granted—After notice of motion—Urgency.—I have only had the affidavits read for the purpose of seeing if it was a case not for an ex p. injunction, but for an interim order, where the other side is served with notice & has not had an opportunity of answering the affidavits. I am clearly of opinion on the facts that, supposing pltf. are right as to the law, it is a case for that kind of injunction which is not strictly an ex p. injunction but which is very much like it. They give notice to the other side, they have not had time to answer, & therefore I shall give them an injunction on the usual terms of an undertaking in damages (JESSEL, M.R.).—FENWICK v. EAST

SECT. 3.—EVIDENCE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—DISCRETION OF COURT.

1087. To act on evidence before it—Without cross-examination of witnesses.—On a motion to dissolve an injunction to stay proceedings at law pltf. in equity has no right, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 40, to require that the motion shall stand over in order that he might examine orally witnesses who have made affidavits for deft.—NORMANVILLE v. STANNING (1853), 10 Hare, App. I., xx.; 68 E. R. 1124.

1088. — — ——In an injunction suit to restrain the infringement of a patent, a pltf. moving for leave to proceed at law must file an affidavit of his belief in his title & in the alleged infringement. Order made upon such an affidavit, notwithstanding an application by deft. that the motion might stand over for the cross-examination of pltf.—MAYER v. SPENCE (1860), 1 John. & H. 87; 29 L. J. Ch. 552; 6 Jur. N. S. 672; 8 W. R. 559; 70 E. R. 673.

1089. All material facts must be disclosed—Interim order.—FULLER v. TAYLOR, No. 1082, ante.

PART XI. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 7.

c. Pending appeal.—Pltf. in a partnership action obtained judgment in his favour, & deft. having given security for costs appealed to the Ct. of Appeal. Pltf. then made an application to the Ct. of Appeal for an injunction to restrain deft. from dealing with partnership moneys & for a receiver:—Held: a Judge of the Ct. of Appeal may at time during vacation make any interim order to prevent prejudice to the claims of any party pending an appeal & what may be done by a Judge during vacation may be done by the Ct. at any other time; & the Ct. of Appeal, for the purposes of appeals, etc., may exercise the power, authority, & jurisdiction by the Jud. Act vested in the High Ct.—EMBRICK v. McCURDY (No. 2) (1907), 10 O. W. R. 131; 14 O. L. R. 325.—CAN

PART XI. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.

d. Conflicting evidence.—Where the evidence, as to the injury done to a highway by the manner in which a railway was constructed, was conflicting, the ct. refused an injunction, leaving the parties to their legal remedy.—FREDERICKSBURG MUNICIPALITY v. GRAND TRUNK RY. CO. (1858), 6 Gr. 555.—CAN.

See, also, No. 57, ante, No. 1414, post.

1092. What must be shown—Extreme urgency—Or that notice mischievous.]—The affidavits, upon which an ex p. application for an injunction is made, must show, either, that notice to deft. would be mischievous, or that the mischief is so urgent, that it would be done, if notice were served upon deft., before the injunction could be obtained. When the affidavits fall short of this point, the motion must be directed to stand over, & notice of it to be served upon deft. (per CUR.).—ANON. (1822), 1 L. J. O. S. Ch. 3.

1093. —.]—Date when plaintiff knew of threatened injury.]—An affidavit in support of an ex p. injunction, must always state the precise time at which pltf., or those acting for him, became aware of the threatened injury. This is a rule which I have laid down for my own guidance, & I have seen no reason to relax it (SHADWELL, V.C.).—CALVERT v. GRAY (1830), 2 Coop. temp. Cott. 171; 47 E. R. 1108.

PART XI. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.

1090 i. All material facts must be disclosed.]—The rule that all material facts must be brought forward in obtaining ex p. injunctions is a useful one, but care must be taken not to carry it too far by which prolixity would be produced.—LAVEZZOLO v. DAYLESFORD CORPN. (1864), 1 W. W. & A'B. 113.—AUS.

1090 ii. —.]—On an application for an injunction ex p., all the facts should be fully disclosed; but the injunction will not be dissolved on the ground of the suppression of facts, if the facts suppressed would not have altered the decision of the judge.—HAMILTON v. BROWN (1866), 2 Old. 260.—CAN.

1090 iii. —.]—COY v. COY (1866), 1 Han. 177.—CAN.

1090 iv. —.]—Where a party applies for an ex p. injunction, he is bound to state all the facts which are important to be brought before the Ct., & which might influence it in determining upon the application; & if important facts within the knowledge of the party are omitted, the injunction will be dissolved without regard to the merits.—ST. v. BROWN (1872), 1 Pug.

1090 vii. —.]—The rule that on an application for an ex p. injunction order a full & truthful disclosure must be made of all material facts, must be strictly observed.—CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. CO. v. NASON (1907), 2 E. L. R. 498; 3 N. B. Eq. Rep. 476.—CAN.

1090 ix. —.]—When pltf. comes for an ex p. injunction, he must state his case in the first case in the first instance fully & fairly.—HEMPHILL v. M'KENNA (1842), 3 Dr. & War. 183.—IR.

1090 x. —.]—The Ct. deals with great strictness with parties who apply for ex p. injunctions, & pltf. applying comes under a contract with the Ct. that he will state the whole case fully & fairly. If he fail to do so, & the Ct. finds, when the other party applies to dissolve the injunction, that any material fact has been suppressed or improperly brought forward, so as to lead the Ct. to grant the injunction, it will dissolve the injunction without deciding on the merits. The affidavit should set forth the grounds on which it is believed that deft. justifies his acts.—SMITH v. PALMER (1873), 1 J. R. 195.—N.Z.

PART XI. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 3.

e. Evidence must be clear—As to purpose of injunction.]—On appeal from when the injunction has been dissolved, & pltf. afterwards by inspecting the documents referred to by the answer, discovers new matter, he cannot move to revive the injunction upon an amended bill containing the new matter & verified by affidavit.—POWELL v. LASSALETTE (1822), Jac. 549; 37 E. R. 957, L. C.

1097. —.]—A.-G. v. LIVERPOOL CORPN., No. 1431, post.

1098. —.]—If pltf. alleges one state of circumstances, & afterwards relies at the hearing on other circumstances, he has not a right to avail himself of it as it comes out; he ought to have amended his bill, & admitted the case, & left defts. to grapple with it as they could. As he proves a different thing from that which he charges, I am of opinion that he has failed in supporting the equity stated by the bill, & it must therefore be dismissed, & the injunction dissolved (SHADWELL, V.C.).—BUTTS v. MATTHEWS (1836), 5 L. J. Ch. 134.

1099. —.]—An injunction was obtained to restrain an action at law on a bond, upon an allegation in the bill that it was obtained under an apprehension of its being another document. A case of a voluntary settlement & breach of confidence between principal & agent was now raised in support of the injunction, from statements contained in deft.'s answer:—Held: the case made out upon the answer did not correspond with the allegations in the bill & could not be set up under the general allegation of fraud & under influence.—BURTON v. BLAKEMORE (1838), 2 Jur. 1062; subsequent proceedings (1839), 3 Jur. 70.

1100. —.]—(1) Where pltf. filed a bill praying certain relief, & on that case then made obtained an injunction, & afterwards by supplemental bill made a new case & sought relief upon grounds paramount to the case made by his original bill:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to the extraordinary interference of Ct. by injunction, after having kept back the most important parts of the case on which he might have proceeded in the first instance.

(2) A party coming for an injunction is bound order for attachment:—Held: pltf. were bound to give most accurate description of land in respect of which they sought injunction & as this had not been done order for attachment would be set aside.—ASTLEY UNITED GOLD MINING CO. REGISTERED v. COSMOPOLITAN GOLD MINING CO. REGISTERED (1867), 4 W. W. & A'B. 96.—AUS.

f. —.]—Injunction refused on the ground that the evidence did not sufficiently define the acts from which deft. ought to be restrained; & that it would, if granted, have to be such a kind that the Ct. could not hold deft. to be in contempt without the assistance of another jury.—LITCHFIELD v. BLENHEIM CORPN. (1890), 8 N. Z. L. R. 638.—N.Z.

g. Cross-examination of plaintiff.]—As a general rule an order under r. 401 will not be made for the attendance for cross-examination of a pltf. who has made an affidavit leading to an interim injunction before deft. files an affidavit of merits.—LEAVOCK v. WEST (1897), 6 B. C. R. 404.—CAN.

h. Cross-examination of defendant.]—On motion for an injunction against one deft., the cross-examination of another deft. on his answer was held inadmissible in reply to the affidavits filed in answer to the motion, where deft. against whom pltf. moved had no notice of the cross-examination, or of pltf.'s intention to read the depositions to come with speed after the right he seeks to enforce has been questioned; & he is bound to come, without leaving his opponent to apply himself to a different case than that ultimately made. On that ground, that the interest of suitors requires that pltf. shall state his whole case at once, & not bring it forward piecemeal, I am bound to refuse the injunction (LORD COTTENHAM, L.C.).

1103. —.]—(1) Where a pltf. alleges & proves, in a case for an injunction, a peculiar & specific injury, the order which he obtains gives him an extended right, in general terms, to restrain any injury of the same kind; but where the peculiar & specific injury is distinctly stated upon the pleadings, & where the words used describe another peculiar & specific injury proposed to be proved, pltf. is not entitled to relief.

(2) Where a bill states that an injury by deft. will, by a certain mode of operation, be inflicted upon pltf., & then, after giving notice of motion for an injunction, that mode of operation is changed & another adopted, the wholesome arrangement is to amend the bill.

The primary evidence of such damage should be that of ordinary witnesses. Scientific evidence should be resorted to, not to establish the fact of the damage, but only to explain the causes of it. The ct. will not in such cases send an expert to report where such course would in fact be giving a new trial on new evidence, & delegating the judgment of the ct. to that of the expert, nor will it direct an issue where the state of things may have been materially altered from lapse of time since the institution of the suit.

The co. proposed to cross the particular road in question not on a level, but to raise the road & build a bridge over it, & carry the line of railway underneath. On appeal:—Held: the words, coupled with the other sects. of the Act, were permissive merely, & not mandatory, & dissolved the injunction.

(2) It is highly inconvenient for the ct. to grant an injunction to restrain the performance of works, "in any other manner than authorised by the words of an Act of Parliament," unaccompanied by a statement of what, in the opinion of 1154. ———.]—(1) Language of the injunction held to be too indefinite & injunction dissolved on terms.

The first duty of the ct. in granting an injunction of this kind is to lay down a clear & definite rule. If the language of the order in which the injunction is contained be in itself ambiguous, uncertain, indefinite, giving no clear rule of conduct, the injunction becomes a snare to debt. If he violates it, he is liable to be imprisoned. It is the bounden duty of the ct., therefore, in granting an injunction, to take care that the language of its order shall be such that it is quite clear what it permits & what it prohibits (LORD WESTBURY, C.).

Pltfs. alleged that "Chartreuse" meant liqueur made at the Monastery. Deft. A. was London agent of a French distillery at Voiron, Isere, in France. Deft. alleged that "Chartreuse" was a generic word & publici juris, & further alleged a concurrent right of user in his principal of the name under an agreement, the meaning of which had been determined by a French ct. of first instance. Pltfs. contended that the agreement was null & void, according to French law, & could have no effect in England:—Held: apart from the agreement, pltfs. were entitled to an absolute injunction; but having regard to the agreement & the French judgment thereon, an injunction would be granted in special terms, with liberty to apply should an appeal from the French judgment be successful.—*GREZIER & DOYLE v. In the first case the order is made to enable pltf. to get his rights; in the second, because it is not for the public benefit that the course of justice should be obstructed.

The ct. has undoubted jurisdiction to commit for contempt a person [a solr.] not included in an injunction or a party to the action who, knowing of the injunction, aids & abets deft. in committing a breach of it.—*SEAWARD v. 1175. Right of limited duration—Order limited—Patent.]—A patent was taken out in France, in 1858, by A., who, in 1861, obtained letters patent for his invention in England. The English patent was assigned by A. to C., who, in Jan. 1865, obtained, in a suit against E. for infringement, a decree by which the validity of the patent was declared, & an injunction was granted to restrain infringement. In Feb. 1866, a judgment of dechéance was pronounced by the French tribunal at Paris, declaring the French patent & all rights under it, determined & void, from Feb. 1864, on the ground of non-payment by A. from that time of the annual duties imposed upon patentees by the French law.

Upon a motion by C., in Jan. 1867, to commit E. for breach of the injunction awarded by the decree of Jan. 1866:—Held: (1) A.'s English patent being identical with his French patent, it was determined in this country by force of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, s. 25, from Feb. 1866, the date of the annulment of the French patent by declaration of the French Ct., but not sooner; & although such declaration was in terms retrospective, yet, until actually obtained, the English patent remained in force, & there was no error calling for amendment by bill of review in the decree of this ct., by which its validity was declared in Jan. 1866; (2) the injunction granted in Jan. 1866, being only co-existent with the patent, expired when the patent was determined, & it was open to E. to answer to the motion to commit, to show that there was no longer any order of the ct. in existence which he which pltf. claimed as his. Defts. having, notwithstanding, obtained possession of the logs, a motion to extend the injunction so that, in effect, pltf. might receive possession of the logs from defts. was retained until after trial of issues as to pltf.'s property in the logs, this being disputed by defts.—*FARWELL v. Where the minutes asked for a perpetual injunction against some defts. only, in the absence of the others, the difficulty was overcome by treating the application as interlocutory, & making the order asked for, & in addition staying all further proceedings against defts. who appeared.—*COOKE v. 1181. ——— Injunction unnecessary—Liberty to apply in case of future injury.—Although it is necessary to consider what has been the intention of deft. against whom an action is brought for the alleged disturbance of a market, in committing the acts complained of, yet in a case where deft. had set up a rival market on a market day, taking advantage of the concourse of people coming to the lawful market, it was held to be quite immaterial that he had no intention to rivalling the lawful market; but that it was not necessary to give effect to this conclusion by granting an injunction, for, in the circumstances, the justice of the case would be met by a declaration to the effect that the conduct of deft. was unlawful & constituted an invasion of pltf.'s market, with liberty to pltf. to apply for an injunction if deft. should repeat the wrongful acts complained of.—*WILCOX v. Eventually, pltf. & deft., who were the last continuing partners, dissolved partnership, & pltf. filed a bill against deft., & obtained a decree, which he immediately enrolled, declaring that deft. had no interest in the house, & restraining him from entering it. Deft. being about to appeal to the House of Lords against the decree, moved to suspend the injunction pending the appeal:—Held: the case was one in which irreparable injury might be done to deft.; & deft. undertaking to proceed with the appeal, with due diligence & to abide by any order as to damages which the ct. might make, the ct. suspended the injunction pending the appeal.—*WALFORD v. 1236. To protect from improper applications.]—

(1) An injunction to restrain deft. from building so as to prevent access of light & air to pltf.'s windows was granted ex p. on Nov. 4, 1879, & on Nov. 27, was continued until the trial or further order, pltf. giving the usual undertaking as to damages. On Feb. 18, 1880, the Ct. of Appeal discharged the order. On Nov. 11, 1880, a perpetual injunction as to access of air was granted; but on June 21, 1881, the Ct. of Appeal dismissed the action with costs. On Feb. 16, 1882, deft. gave notice of motion for an inquiry as to damages which was refused. The only damage alleged was that deft. had agreed to let part of the property with the new buildings to a tenant & was prevented from carrying this out by the injunction preventing his building. It was not proved, however, that there was any binding agreement to take a lease nor did it appear that the injunction interfered with the erection of the buildings to such an extent as would have entitled the intended tenant to throw up the agreement if binding:—Held: an inquiry as to damages ought not to be granted. Qu.: whether where an interlocutory injunction has been wrongly granted owing to a mistake of law by the judge without any misrepresentation, suppression, or other default on the part of pltf. an inquiry as to damages can be directed under the undertaking.

(2) The ct. is not bound to grant an inquiry as to damages whenever deft. has sustained some damage by the granting the injunction; but it is by an inquiry as to damages, & where deft. obtains judgment he may proceed to enforce the judgment in the ordinary way.—PAULSON v. MURRAY, [1921] 2 W. W. R. 735; 31 Man. L. R. 258.—CAN.

1. To whom made.]—The undertaking usually inserted in an interim injunction order is one not to the party, but to the ct. to pay damages if the ct. should be of opinion that under the circumstances pltf. ought to pay damages, & he puts himself in the power of the ct. for that purpose independently of the suit.—MOBRATNEY v. SEXSMITH, [1924] 3 D. L. R. 84; 2 W. W. R. 455.—CAN.

damages, & bring into ct. or offer to secure the amount.—GEORGIAN BAY TRANSPORTATION CO. v. FISHER (1880), 5 A. R. 383.—CAN.

1237 ii. —.]—Where a pltf. before prosecuting an action is required to give security for costs, as where he resides out of the jurisdiction, he must also give the undertaking for damages of a responsible person within the jurisdiction as one term of getting an interlocutory injunction.—DELAP v. ROBINSON (1898), 18 P. R. 231.—CAN.

1237 iii. —.]—An undertaking as to damages ought to be given by a pltf. who obtains an interlocutory order for an injunction, not only when the order is made ex p., but even when it is made upon hearing both sides.—NEW VAN (1898), 6 B. O. R. 222.—CAN.

has a discretion & may refuse any inquiry if the damage restrained is trivial or remote or if there has been great delay in making the application.

(3) The question considered at what time the application for an inquiry as to damages ought to be made:—Held: even if there had been a binding agreement by the proposed tenant to take a lease, & the injunction had so interfered with the building as to entitle the tenant to be off the bargain, damages ought not to be granted in respect of it, for that damages must be confined to the immediate natural consequences of the injunction under the circumstances which were within the knowledge of the party obtaining the injunction.

The damages must be confined to loss which is the natural consequence of the injunction under the circumstances of which the party obtaining the injunction has notice (COTTON, L.J.).

(4) The undertaking was not intended to apply where the injunction was wrongly granted (JESSEL, M.R.).—SMITH v. DAY (1882), 21 Ch. D. 421; 48 L. T. 54; 31 W. R. 187, C. A.

On May 12, an injunction was granted. The registrar prefaced the order by an undertaking in damages on the part of defts. in the ordinary form. Defendants now moved to vary the minutes of order by omitting the undertaking as to damages:—Held: the object in insisting on an undertaking as to damages is, that if from the ct. not knowing all the facts it turns out that an injunction has been granted on an interlocutory application, which ought not to have been granted, then resp. is entitled to compensation, & the order being in the nature of a final order, the ordinary form was not applicable.—FENNER v. 1282 ii. ———.]—An application for an order directing an inquiry as to & payment of the damages occasioned to deft. by reason of an interim injunction obtained by pltf. upon the usual undertaking as to damages, & dissolved by the judgment in the action, should be made to the trial judge. Such an application is in the discretion of the judge. Where the chief point at issue was, whether or not pltf. were liable to assessment & taxation for local improvements:—Held: the good faith of pltf., their duty as trustees to assert what they conceived to be their rights, the importance of the issue as to assessment (involving, as it did, the right of defts., a city corpn. to pass the bye-law under which they acted), the arbitrary, though legal, conduct of defts. in laying out the work to the manifest disadvantage of pltf., & the equally manifest benefit of interested property-owners on the opposite side of the street, & the fact that the dismissal of the action was without costs, were circumstances which warranted the conclusion that, if defts. had suffered damages by reason of the injunction, they were not such damages as pltf. ought to pay; & defts.' application for an order for an inquiry & payment was dismissed with costs.—UPPER CANADA COLLEGE v. CITY OF TORONTO (1917), 40 O. L. R. 483.—CAN.

1282 iii. ———.]—If an interlocutory injunction obtained by pltf. is dissolved before or after trial, it does not necessarily follow that the successful deft. is entitled to damages. The test is, whether pltf., by the suppression of facts, or misrepresentation, or maliciously, improperly obtains the injunction. The discretion of the ct. will be exercised in favour of awarding damages only in case the issuance of the injunction or order was wrongful in the sense that it was prompted by malice or was without reasonable & probable cause or where the terms of the order were such that deft. could not reasonably be expected to act under it in such a way as to avoid damages. All the surrounding facts

1283 i. Dismissal of motion.]—On obtaining an ex p. injunction restraining the sale of property, pltf. entered into the usual undertaking as to damages, & subsequently dismissed his bill; whereupon deft. moved for a reference to the master to inquire as to damages sustained by him, when, in answer to the application, it was shown, that, since the dismissal of the bill, an increased price had already been offered, & that it was probable a still greater advance in price would be obtained on a sale. The ct. refused the application, but without costs, & reversed to deft. liberty to renew his application, on which he should be at liberty to use depositions & affidavits read on the present motion.—FEATHERSTONE v. SMITH (1873), 20 Gr. 474.—CAN.

1287 i. Discontinuance of action.]—In an action in a county ct. which brought up the question of the existence of a partnership, pltf. obtained an injunction & then discontinued the action. Deft. applied for an order directing an inquiry as to the damages resulting from the injunction & the judge ordered a reference to the registrar, not only to inquire & report as damages, but also to decide whether a partnership existed:—Held: the appeal should be allowed.—*JOHN HING Co. v. Unexplained & unreasonable delay in making such an application will be a sufficient ground for refusing it, even if the bkpcy. proceedings are still pending & the receiver has not obtained his discharge:—Held: an unexplained delay of nearly four years in making such an application was a sufficient answer to it, though appct. had shown a prima facie case.—Re WOOD, Ex p. HALL (1883), 23 Ch. (4) A married woman who has given an undertaking as to damages since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), will be dealt with on the same footing as that on which a married woman's next friend who had given such an undertaking would have been dealt with before the Act.

(2) The works for stopping up the above-mentioned road were commenced in Oct. 1849, but the road was not rendered entirely impassable till Feb. 1850:—Held: an application for an injunction in Feb. 1850, was not too late.

The bill prayed for an injunction restraining the co. from obstructing the road or rendering the same less convenient for the passage of carriages, etc., than it had previously been, until they had made a proper substituted road. An injunction to that effect was granted. The co. then changed their plan, & instead of lowering the road, carried the railway across it on a level, with posts & gates, which were closed only during a few short & ascertained periods in the day, when trains crossed:—Held: the general terms of the injunction were not restricted by reference to the particular nature of the injury complained of, but that it had, in spirit, as well as terms, been violated.—*A.-G. v. After the order M. & co. circulated amongst E.'s customers a pamphlet prepared by the A. co. which stated in effect that M. & co. were the special agents of the A. co. who were the exclusive makers of the machine in question under the licence of the patentee, & who intended to prosecute all infringers of their patents:—Held: the injunction was not so plainly worded to prohibit what C. had done, as to justify a judicial decision that a breach of the injunction had been committed.

The co., for the purpose of transporting earth from the higher lands on the south to the lower land on the north side of the canal for constructing an embankment, erected a temporary bridge over the canal, supported partly on piles driven into the bed of the canal. Defts. by consent submitted to an order restraining them from making such representations & threats. D. subsequently moved to commit deft. H. for breach of the order. D.'s evidence was to the effect that H. subsequently to the date of the order, told

Defts. made default in pleading, & the injunction was granted in due course. Later it appeared that a similar article to that complained of was being put upon the market by N., for whom defts. were acting as agents for sale. On a motion for attachment of defts. for breach of the injunction no direct evidence was forthcoming, & the case was rested on admissions by defts., which the ct. held to be insufficient, & on the fact that defts., having allowed judgment to go against them by default, were estopped from saying that the goods complained of were not an imitation of those of pltf.'s manufacture:—Held: in these circumstances an attachment could not issue.—RIPLEY v. In 1885 an injunction was obtained by pltf. restraining deft. & her agents from further molesting the owner & tenants of the estate; but she, notwithstanding, again endeavoured to take possession, & was in consequence in Dec. 1886, imprisoned for contempt of ct. She was informed when sent to prison that if she would undertake to abandon her claim & to abstain from further efforts to take possession of the premises, she would be released. At the expiration of that period plffs. desired to enforce the injunction, but in the meantime the B. T. & R. Board had succeeded to the rights & liabilities of the Corpn. of Birmingham in respect of the sewage:—Held: the decree could only be enforced against the board by an action.—*A.-G. v. Shortly afterwards deft. trustees retired, & new trustees were appointed, who, being aware of the effect of the injunction, under an order of the branch society, divided the money among the members, including the old trustees. The ct. considered, on the facts, that the proceedings were an attempt on the part of the branch society & the old & new trustees to avoid the injunction, & a device for disobeying it, in which the new trustees co-operated:—Held: the new trustees, as well as the old, were guilty of contempt of ct.—*VERY v. 1366. ——— ——— Reconstructed company.—An injunction was obtained by plff. against a co., restraining them, their servants & agents, from soliciting the custom of persons who before the sale of a certain part of their business to plff. were their customers. Thereafter the co. went into voluntary liquidation, & a new co. was formed under the same name, to which were transferred the assets & business of the old co.:—Held: as the reconstruction of the old co. had been regularly carried out for the sake of obtaining new capital & not colourably for the sake of evading the order, the new co. became an independent co. & was in no sense the servant or agent of the old, & therefore in soliciting a customer of plff. the new co. committed no breach of the injunction which had been obtained.—*BOSCH v. 1371. Injunction against husband & wife—Breach by wife—Husband not in contempt.—After a decree against a husband & wife, who were living separate, she living abroad, & disobeying an order of the ct.:—Held: the husband was entitled on motion to an order that she should appear separately in all further proceedings in the suit, & he should not be responsible for any neglect on her part in relation to such proceedings, nor liable to any attachment or process in consequence of such neglect; & it was not necessary to serve notice of the motion upon his wife, service of notice of such a motion on plff. being sufficient; & leave was given to plff. to serve the order & any other proceedings on the wife abroad.—*HOPE v. land, an attachment for breach of it will not be granted against the manager, directors or servants of the co., unless there is evidence that they have done some of it which they were commanded not to do. The utmost which the injunction means, as to them, is that, if they cause sludge to flow they must accompany it by some precaution to prevent mischief. Where, however, mischief had been done, probably caused by such persons, the ct. refused their costs of resisting a motion for attachment. A subsequent motion for a sequestration of the co.'s property, for breach of the injunction, was granted.—SEAL v. WEBSTER STREET FREEHOLD G. M. CO. (1868), 5 W. W. & A'B. 129.—AUS.

An action of damages subsequently raised by the tenant was sent to trial on an issue whether defender had by means of the interdict wrongfully prevented pursuer from taking the said crop. The jury returned a verdict for pursuer with $1,068 damages. On a motion by defender for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against evidence & that the damages were excessive:—Held: the judgment of the ct. recalling the interdict was in a case of this nature conclusive evidence, that the interdict was wrongful in the sense of the issue, & the fact that the landlord obtained the interdict in good faith & upon probable cause did not absolve him from responsibility for the damage thereby occasioned; but the application having been proved to have been made in bona fide & on probable cause, the damage should have been measured by the actual loss sustained by the tenant & not by his possible gains, & in this view the damages given were excessive & new trial granted.—*MILLER v. B. on Dec. 16, 1869, then instituted a suit against A. for damage in consequence of the injunction which A. had caused to issue against him in his suit:—Held: B. was not debarred, by Act VIII, 1859, s. 96, from instituting a suit against A. for damages, there not having been an award of compensation under that sect. An ex p. injunction was obtained by pltf. shortly before two o'clock on a Saturday afternoon on condition that a party should be added as pltf. for the purpose of his counsel giving on his behalf the usual undertaking as to damages. The writ was not amended until the following Tuesday morning whilst a motion was being made to dissolve the injunction. The ct. dissolved the injunction without deciding the merits, on the ground that pltf. had not fulfilled the terms on which the injunction was granted & had thereby left deft. without the protection of the undertaking as to damages.—SPANISH GENERAL AGENCY CORPN. v. On the application of pltf. the ct. granted an interlocutory injunction, restraining the council from serving a notice to take compulsorily, or from asserting at

By order-in-council, dated Apr. 7, 1881, the Comr. of Crown Lands was authorised to sell the lands in question to the co., & the co. deposited $12,000 on account of the intended purchase. On May 9, the co. gave a contract for the clearing of a portion of the land, & on July 19 the comr. executed a grant in favour of the co., subject to the current licences to cut timber on the lots:—Held: the co. had not acquired title to the lands in question prior to July 19, 1881; by the grant of that date their rights were subordinated to all current licences, & applts. having established their right to possess the lands for the purposes of their lumbering operations under the licence from the Crown, the injunction was dissolved.—HALL v. An order was afterwards made dissolving the injunction; & a further order was subsequently made, by which pltf., in equity, were directed to give judgment in the ejectment:—Held: the principles & practice of the ct. did not warrant the last mentioned order.

The ct. can have no ground upon which it can proceed in granting an ex p. injunction, but a faithful statement of the case; & when the ct. has found a party misstating his case, either by misrepresentation or suppression, the ct. has always exercised its jurisdiction, for the purpose of repressing that practice. . . . But the question is whether there was any such suppression or misstatement as to lead the ct. to grant the injunction (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).

state of facts is presented, the power of an equity judge to dissolve an injunction is not affected by there being an action at law pending to try the title.—SMITH v. MORROW (1873), 2 Pug. 24.—CAN.

It was not disclosed, but subsequently appeared that the land through which defts. were proceeding to lay the pipes had been used for many years as a public highway, & that pipes had been laid therein twenty-five years previously for the same purpose, & the then proprietors had been compensated for the damage:—Held: on appeal from a decision dissolving the injunction, the omission of pltf.'s counsel, when he obtained the restraining order, to bring before the ct. the existence of the highway & its relation to the injury complained of, was sufficient ground for dismissing the appeal.—KEARNEY v. DICKSON (1885), 6 R. & G. 65; 6 C. L. T. 140.—CAN.

1413 xiv. ———.]—The non-disclosure of material facts on the application for an ex p. injunction for a limited time, although a ground for discharging it, will not necessarily disentitle pltf. to succeed on a motion to continue the expiring injunction when both sides present their cases fully, & the ct. is not bound to specifically discharge the interim injunction or to award costs to the defts.—MILLER v. CAMPBELL (1903), 14 Man. L. R. 437.—CAN.

1413 xv. ———.]—Where it appears that an order of injunction was obtained by a statement which was false, the injunction will be dissolved.—HART v. BROWN (1913), 23 W. L. R. 295; 9 D. L. R. 560.—CAN.

The railway co. had begun to remove the clay on Mar. 9, of which fact pltf. was ignorant at the time of making his affidavit:—Held: although pltf. might, if he had made inquiries, have known, that the clay was in course of removal, yet his ignorance of that fact, owing to which, it was not made known to the ct., was not equivalent to concealment or misrepresentation, & the ex p. injunction was therefore not improperly obtained.

Whatever title pltf. may have to an ex p. injunction (which is the mode in which this ct. affords extraordinary relief to parties injured) if it subsequently turn out that it was obtained through means of misrepresentation or concealment on his part, he ought to have no benefit from it, but it should be discharged with costs. That is quite unconnected with merits; & if the ct. is imposed upon, it will subsequently so watch its jurisdiction as to take away the advantages which the party would derive from an abuse of its process. . . . The mere ignorance of what a party might have known, is not equivalent to concealment, so as to amount to improper conduct (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—*SEMPLE v. LONDON & BIRMINGHAM RY. 1431. Whether new circumstances may be adduced—To support injunction.]—(1) The ct. will not grant an injunction to restrain parties from proceeding to deal with property whose right, if it exists, depends upon the construction of a doubtful statute, where the granting of the injunction would for ever deprive them of an opportunity of exercising the right especially if no irreparable mischief is to be apprehended from allowing them to proceed.

(2) A very wholesome rule has been established in this ct. that if a party comes for an ex p. injunction & misrepresents the facts of the case, he shall not then be permitted to support the injunction by showing another state of circumstances in which he would be entitled to it (PEPYS, M.R.).—*A.-G. v. 1438. ——— Facts raising point of law.]—The Bristol Improvement Act, 1840, enacts that no opening shall be made in any party wall except for communication from one building to another. Pltf. had a house, one wall of which was, to the height of the first storey, a party wall between pltf.'s house & a building belonging to defts., but above that height had ancient windows opening to the external air. Pltf. pulled down his house, & proposed to rebuild it with windows in the same position as before. Before doing this, he gave notice to defts., under the Act, that the wall, which he described as a party wall, was out of repair, & a certificate of two surveyors was given directing the party wall to be rebuilt at the joint expense of pltf. & defts. Defts. afterwards proceeded to erect a building which would obstruct the light coming to the ancient windows of pltf. An injunction was granted, restraining defts. from obstructing pltf.'s ancient lights. Pltf. had obtained an ex p. injunction upon the filing of the bill; but no mention was made in the bill, or in the affidavit in support of the motion, of the notice to pull down the wall, or the certificate of the surveyors:—Held: inasmuch as these facts were only important as raising a point of law, based on an unreasonable construction of the Act, they were not material facts, & pltf. was justified in omitting them.—*WESTON v. 1451. Affirmation.]—If injunction be dissolved on the merits, another cannot be obtained as of course on an amended or supplemental bill. The injunction having issued irregularly:—Held: deft. had not waived the objection by a mere application for time to answer the bill. Objections as to irregular process can only be waived by a party doing some act expressly founded on it, or amounting to a clear affirmance.—TRAVERS v. STAFFORD (LORD) & FURNESS (1750), 2 Ves. 1452. Subsequent appearance of defendant.]—Where an order had been obtained, that service of a subpoena on the attorney of deft., who resided abroad, & had brought an action at law against pltf., should be good service; but such order was obtained, & the subpoena issued & served two days before the filing of the bill, the ct. refused to discharge the order for irregularity, holding that the irregularity, if any, had been waived by a subsequent appearance of deft.

In injunction bills, where deft. resides abroad, & an application is made that service of process on his attorney at law may be good service, the ct. of Ch. requires the bill to be accompanied by an affidavit by pltf., of merits. In this ct. the affidavit is not required until the motion is made for the injunction.—ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE CO. v. SHORT (1827), 1 Y. & J. 570; 148 E. R. 798.

1453. Acquiescence.]—The Ct. of Ch. has no jurisdiction to order the incumbent of a church, who had made certain alterations in the building by removing the pews, etc., & substituting chairs, to take the necessary proceedings to obtain a faculty from the bishop of the diocese for the restoration of the church. An injunction was granted to restrain the alteration of the walls or brickwork of the church without the authority of the archdeacon or bishop, on pltf.'s undertaking to apply to the proper ecclesiastical ct. for authority to restore the church to its original state.

I think that defts. have shown acquiescence in respect of the injunction & therefore that part of the order of the Vice-Chancellor will not be disturbed. . . . Pltf. must undertake to apply to the proper ecclesiastical ct. for authority to complete the restoration of the interior of the church, & on his doing that, the order for the injunction may continue (LORD WESTBURY, C.).—*CARDINALL v. Where on motion for a mandatory injunction an order was made by consent pursuant to the terms of a previous agreement by which deft. gave an undertaking to remove certain obstructions, & it appeared that deft. had by mistake consented to a more extensive undertaking than he intended to do, the ct. refused to enforce that part of the undertaking which had been given by mistake.—*MULLINS v. 1455. Withdrawal of consent—Fresh application necessary.]—An action was brought against a local board to restrain them from pulling down certain houses of pltf.'s & for damages. On a motion for an injunction coming on, defts.' counsel by the authority of his clients, consented to an order for a perpetual injunction with costs, & an inquiry as to damages, & such order was taken by consent without opening the case to ct. Before the order had been passed, the defts. formally withdrew their consent, & the registrar thereupon declined to pass the order without the direction of the ct. Pltf. moved that he might be directed to proceed to perfect the order. Defts. alleged that their instructions to consent had been given under a misapprehension, but did not enter into any evidence in support of that allegation:—Held: where counsel by the authority of their clients consent to an order, the clients cannot arbitrarily withdraw such consent, & the registrar must be directed to proceed to perfect the order, without prejudice to any application which defts. might make to the ct. below to be relieved from their consent, on the ground of mistake or surprise or for other sufficient reason.—*HARVEY v. On motion by deft. that he might be relieved from the consent so given:—Held: a party who has deliberately consented to a perpetual injunction cannot be permitted to withdraw his consent merely because he has subsequently discovered that he might have a good defence to the action, the case was not one of mistake, & the motion must be refused.—*ELSAS v. By inadvertence the manufacturer marked some of the articles with a mark which belonged to another design registered by the same proprietor, the copyright of which had expired, using for the purpose by mistake an old die which remained in his possession, & the proprietor, after Patents, Designs & Trademarks Act, 1883 (c. 57), came into operation, sold some of the articles thus wrongly marked without observing the error. The letters Rd. formed part of both the marks:—Held: an innocent infringer of a registered design must pay the costs of a motion for an injunction to restrain him from infringing, though pltf. had given him no notice of the infringement before serving him with the writ in the action.—WITTMAN v. D. Interlocutory Injunction granted and Plaintiff proceeds.

1481. When extra costs allowed—Proceedings for costs only.]—On an interlocutory application, an injunction was granted, which determined the principal subject of dispute between the parties. The ct. held, that pltf. was not justified in afterwards proceeding in the cause for the costs only, & gave him no costs subsequent to that time.—TAYLOR v. DAVIS (1838), 7 L. J. Ch. 179.

1482. ——— Proceedings for perpetual injunction.]—Where the general merits of pltf.'s bill, praying an injunction to restrain the infringement of pltf.'s copyright have not been displaced by the defence, pltf. will be entitled to his costs for bringing such cause to a hearing to obtain a perpetual injunction after an interim injunction has been obtained in such cause.—MAYHEW v. 1483. ——— Application to defendant—To dispose of costs on motion.]—On deft. submitting to pltf.'s demands, pltf. ought not to bring the cause to a hearing without first applying for deft.'s consent to have the costs disposed of on motion. But if deft. objects to that course, a motion that deft. may pay the costs of the suit, will be refused.—MORGAN v. GREAT EASTERN RY. CO. (1863), 1 Hem. & M. 78; 2 New Rep. 60; 8 L. T. 270; 11 W. 1484. ———.]—Where upon an interlocutory motion in an action pltf. obtains the relief which he seeks, he is bound to make an application to deft. to have the costs disposed of on motion, & unless he does so is precluded from having the extra costs occasioned by going on to trial. But if deft. refuses to allow the matter to be disposed of on motion, or if there is any question remaining open between the parties to be decided, the case cannot be so dealt with.—SONNENSCHN v. BARNARD (1887), 57 L. T. 712.

1485. Knowledge of infringement by principal.]—Several boxes of cigars, bearing forged brands, were forwarded from correspondents abroad to agents in this country. The makers, whose brand had been forged, applied to the agents for information, & they gave names of the consignors, & offered either to send back the cigars or erase the brands. They were not previously aware that the brands were false:—Held: a bill for injunction would lie against the agents, but under the circumstances, they were not ordered to pay costs.—UPMANN v. ELKAN (1871), 7 Ch. App. 130; 41 L. J. Ch. 246; 25 L. T. 813; 36 J. P. 295; 20 W. R. 131, L. C.

1487. Extra costs—Untrue allegation in claim.]—As a general rule, costs follow the result; but where the costs of an injunction suit had been increased by an allegation in the bill which was untrue, although the substantial case of pltf. was established, the ct. directed such increased costs to be paid by pltf.—PIERCE v. 1488. ——— Mistake as to plaintiff's title.]—A wrongdoer cannot be heard to complain that in proceedings hurriedly taken to stop the wrong pltf. has not accurately stated his title, & in such a case deft. will not be relieved from the payment of the extra costs occasioned by pltf.'s mistake as to his title.—A.-G. v. TOMLINE (1877), 5 Ch. D. 750; 46 L. J. Ch. 654; 36 L. T. 684; 25 W. R. 803.

1491. Defendant only technically wrong.]—On Sept. 18, 1857, a piece of land was conveyed to the minister & churchwardens of a district church as a site for a church school under the inspection of Govt. The deed provided that the management of the school, & selection, appointment, & dismissal of the schoolmaster & mistress & their assistants should be vested in & exercised by a committee consisting of the vicar & curate or curates & the churchwardens of the district church & five other named persons, subscribers to the school. Vacancies among these five were to be filled up by election by the subscribers to the school for the current year. The deed contained a proviso "that no default of election nor any vacancy during any current year shall prevent the other members of the committee from acting until the vacancy be filled up." The five subscribers appointed by the deed had long since died or left the neighbourhood, & no one had ever been elected in their place. On Sept. 14, 1891, a meeting of the committee was held, at which the vicar, curate, & one of the churchwardens were present, & also a sidesman, who was not properly a member of the committee. No notice had been sent to the other churchwarden. At this meeting a resolution was passed to terminate the engagements of all the existing staff, in order to make new arrangements. The reason given was, that new arrangements were necessary in consequence of Elementary Education Act, 1891 (c. 56). No charges of misconduct or inefficiency were brought against the master. The master brought an action to restrain the committee from dismissing him on the grounds that the committee was improperly constituted, & he ought to have been heard in his own defence:—Held: (1) the committee were competent to proceed, notwithstanding that the vacancies of elected members had never been filled up; but the absence of notice to one churchwarden & the presence of a sidesman at the committee were fatal objections, & an injunction must be granted to restrain the dismissal; (2) the ct. refused to decide whether pltf. ought to have been heard, but granted the injunction without costs on the ground that the committee were substantially right, though they had made a technical mistake.—LANE v. NORMAN (1891), 61 L. J. Ch. 149; 66 L. T. 83; 40 W. R. 268.

20 inches over. Pltf. asked for a mandatory injunction for the removal of the pilaster, but deft. while denying liability paid £5 into ct., & pleaded that that was enough to satisfy pltf.'s claim in respect of the projection:—Held: damages should be awarded in lieu of a mandatory injunction, & as damages to the amount of more than £5 had not been shown & the judge was not satisfied that there were reasonable grounds for not accepting the sum paid in, pltf. must, under above rule, pay the costs of the issue as to liability in respect of the pilaster.—*PETTEY v. 1495. —.]—Where a bill, filed to restrain the obstruction of ancient lights, claimed five windows as ancient lights, &, on an issue directed, pltf. failed to establish their claim to all the windows, it appearing that the new windows could not be obstructed without obstructing the old ones:—Held: pltf. on their present bill were not entitled to any relief; but on their offering to restore their windows to their former position, an injunction was granted, but with costs against pltf., except as to the issue.

No costs given of an issue in which neither party were completely successful.—WEATHERLEY v. ROSS (1863), 1 Hem. & M. 349; 1 New Rep. 228; 32 L. J. Ch. 128; 27 J. P. 388; 71 E. R. 152.

1496. Part costs to plaintiff.]—Pltf. were purchasers in perpetuity of graves & vaults in a private burial ground, of which they had been in possession for upwards of twenty years. The burial ground was closed under the provisions of Burial Act, 1852 (c. 85), & thereupon defts. the trustees of the burial ground, commenced levelling the graves, filling in the vaults, & removing the tomb stones, which they used for the purposes of paving the courtyard surrounding the chapel. Pltf. filed their bill to restrain defts., praying an injunction which extended to the whole of the graves & vaults in the churchyard. An interlocutory injunction was granted restraining defts. from obliterating, removing or defacing the graves & monuments belonging to pltf. individually, & from applying the ground to any other purposes, but the ct. refused to extend the injunction to the graves & tombstones of persons who were not parties to the suit. The injunction was afterwards made perpetual, although defts. claimed, as standing in the place of mtgees. of the burial-ground, in whom the legal estate was vested.

Pltf. having claimed greater rights than they were entitled to, no costs were given up to, & including the interlocutory motion, but defts. were ordered to pay the costs subsequently incurred.—*MORELAND v. 1497. Costs set off as between parties.]—B. alleged that in 1864, he had obtained the consent of the A. co., the owners of an adjoining tenement to open two windows in a party wall separating the two tenements. B. had previously opened three other windows in the party wall. In 1875 the A. co. served B. with notice under Metropolitan Building Act that they intended blocking up all five windows. The three windows in 1875 had been opened up eighteen years. Evidence of consent upon the A. co.'s part to B.'s opening the two windows was admitted by the Vice-Chancellor, who held that such consent was fully proved as to the two windows, & that as to the other three after eighteen years a previous consent to open them must be implied:—Held: the evidence of consent was inadmissible, & as the other three windows were not ancient lights pltf.'s case as to the five windows failed, & that part of his bill must be dismissed with costs.

The Vice-Chancellor had also granted an injunction as to eight other windows as to which there was no appeal:—Held: that as the pltf. had succeeded as to part of his suit & failed as to the rest, the costs of the part as to which he had failed must be taxed & set-off against those of the part as to which he had succeeded, & the balance of such costs only paid to the party entitled to most costs.—BOURKE v. ALEXANDRA HOTEL CO., LTD. (1877), 25 W. R. 782, C. A.

1498. —.]—Pltf. claiming an injunction in respect of three separate subjects of complaint, succeeded as to one, but failed as to the remainder. By the order, taxation was directed of the costs of deft. of so much of the action as had been dismissed, & of pltf. of the rest of the action, with a set-off of the costs of pltf. against those of deft. The taxing master taxed pltf.'s & deft.'s costs of the whole action, & allowed one-third to pltf. & two-thirds to deft. Upon a summons by pltf., to vary the certificate, by ordering each item to be considered separately, & according to the subject of complaint, in respect of which each item might turn out to have been incurred, to be paid by pltf. or deft., as the case might be:—Held: that the taxing master had proceeded upon the usual principle, & the certificate was correct.—*KNIGHT v. 1500. —.]—In an action for nuisance by vibration & by offensive behaviour, judgment was given for defts. on so much of the statement of claim as related to offensive behaviour, & damages were given to pltf. on the ground of nuisance by vibration, which was the point on which pltf. mainly relied. The judgment referred it to the taxing master to tax defts.' costs of so much of the action as related to offensive behaviour & to tax pltf.'s costs of the rest of the action, & the taxing master was to set off the costs of defts. against the costs of pltf., & to certify the balance; & defts. were ordered to pay such balance to pltf.

The taxing master, in taxing the bill of costs brought in by pltf., allowed him one moiety of each item which related to both the issues, & allowed him in full the items which related solely to the issue on which he had succeeded, & followed the same rule in taxing the bill brought in by defts. The result was that pltf. had a small balance to receive. Pltf. appealed from this taxation:—Held: this taxation was correct, & though in the Q. B. Div. this form of order would probably have been construed as giving pltf. his costs of the action except so far as they had been increased by the issue on which he had failed, the settled practice in the Ch. Div. was that under this form of order the general costs should be apportioned ratably between the issues.—JENKINS v. JACKSON, [1891] 1 Ch. 89; 60 L. J. Ch. 206; 63 L. T. 688; 39 W. R. 242, C. A.

In 1896 P., who had infringed the trade mark without knowing of H.'s registration or user of it, communicated with H., asking for the date of registration & disclaiming any intention to infringe. Negotiations ensued between the parties, in which P. was ready to give the undertaking asked for by H. subject to a condition that H. should not advertise it. H. was ready to agree to such condition on P. agreeing to disclose the names of his customers to whom he had supplied the goods. P. would not so agree, & the negotiations fell through. H. issued a writ asking for an injunction, damages or an account of profits, & costs. P., by his defence, offered an undertaking, but made no offer as to costs. At the trial it was admitted that H. was not entitled to damages or an account of profits:—Held: H. was entitled to an injunction & the costs of the action so far as it sought relief by way of injunction, but deft. was entitled to the costs of the action so far as it asked for damages or an account, such costs to be set off.—HIPKINS (G. F.) & SON v. PLANT (W. & J.) (1898), 15 R. P. C. 294.

Defts. having paid £60 into ct. in respect of pltfs.' claim for damages, pltfs. accepted the same in full satisfaction of such claim. At the trial of the action the ct. ordered that the £60 should be paid out of ct. to pltfs. in satisfaction of the cause of action arising out of the entry, & that defts. should pay to pltfs. their costs of the action so far as related to the claim; further, that the rest of pltfs.' action should be dismissed without costs. On taxation pltfs. were allowed the general costs of the action. This was a summons to vary the taxing master's certificate by directing an apportionment of such general costs:—Held: R. S. C., Ord. 65, r. 2, as altered in 1902, made no change in the practice of the Ch. Div. as established by Jenkins v. Jackson, No. 1500, ante. The addition to that order was intended to remove the doubt whether a judge had power to avoid the expense of an apportionment of each item of costs by directing that one party should pay a Defts. in their statement of defence justified the acts complained of on the ground that they were owners of the lands in question, & alternatively alleged that they had done the acts complained of under statutory authority. Pltf. claimed (inter alia) a declaration that defts. were not entitled to make such deposit upon his lands, an injunction, & damages. Defts., while denying liability, brought into ct. the sum of £5, & said that that sum was enough to satisfy the claim in respect of the matters pleaded. Pltf. thereupon gave notice that he accepted the sum paid into ct. "in satisfaction of the claim in respect of which it was paid in." On an appeal by defts. from a decision of the master awarding pltf. his costs in the action:—Held: R. S. C., Ord. 22, r. 7, could not apply in the case of a claim for a declaration of title to land or for an injunction. The costs, therefore, were in the discretion of the ct., & as it appeared doubtful whether an injunction could in any event have been granted, pltf. should have his costs, except in so far as they had been increased by the claim for an injunction, & so far as defts.' costs had been increased by such claim they were to be paid by pltf.—YOUNG v. BLACK SLUICE COMRS. (1909), 73 J. P. 265.

1504. —.—.]—The addition made in 1902 to R. S. C., Ord. 65, r. 2, made an alteration in the practice of the Ch. Div., & is a rule of construction of orders in the form referred to in the first part of the added words. Where, therefore, an order is made giving a pltf. part of the relief asked for & ordering taxation of his costs of the action, except so far as it relates to specified claims on which he has failed, & ordering taxation of deft.'s costs of those claims, with a direction as to set-off, pltf. is entitled to the general costs of the action & deft. is not entitled to have them apportioned.—*HOLLOWAY (GEORGE) & WEBB, LTD. v. SUB-SECT. 3.—SUCCESSFUL DEFENDANT GETS COSTS.

1506. General rule.—I cannot find, in the assertion of a legal right to do a certain thing which it is contended is not & has not hitherto been actionable, any threat or expression of intention to do that thing in the event of its being decided that the doing of it would be actionable; & in the absence of evidence of any such threat or intention, I come to the conclusion that pltf.'s case fails as to an injunction, as well as damages. I have given judgment, dismissing the action without costs. I adopt entirely the general rule that costs ought to follow the result, & when an action is brought for an injunction & damages with respect to what is not an actionable wrong, the successful deft. ought to receive his costs from pltf. But to this general rule there are exceptions, & I think this case an exception for several reasons, of which it is sufficient for me to mention two. In the first place, if I gave deft. the general costs of the action, I should certainly make him pay the costs of each issue which he has set up as to infringement & copying, upon every one of which he had failed. If this were done, deft. certainly would have to pay at least as much in costs as he would be entitled to receive; & to avoid a very troublesome & difficult apportionment of costs on taxation, I cut the knot by giving no costs to either party (NORTH, J.).—SUGG v. BRAY (1884), 54 L. J. Ch. 132; 51 L. T. 194; Griffin's Patent Cases, 210.

1507. Exceptions to general rule—Defendant's conduct dubious.—If a trader imitates another person's label or trade mark, & sails so near the wind as just to avoid an injunction, though the ct. does not grant the injunction it will not willingly give him any costs of the proceedings.—BASS v. DAWBER (1869), 19 L. T. 626.

1509. —.—.]—If it is proved that a trade mark was adopted with a fraudulent intention, the ct. will not refuse to grant an injunction to restrain the use of it, on the ground that many years have elapsed since its adoption. But after a trade mark has been used for many years the ct. will require clearer proof that it was first used for the purpose of fraud than if it had been recently adopted. In such a case it is not sufficient to show that a trade mark was calculated to deceive, but pltf. must distinctly prove that he has been actually injured by its use.

As some doubt is thrown on defts.' motive . . . I think the bill should be dismissed without costs (MELLISH, L.J.).—RODGERS v. RODGERS (1874), 31 L. T. 285; 22 W. R. 887, L. J.

The word "registered" appeared on both bats, pltfs.' device being in fact registered as a trade mark, but not defts.' although steps had been taken to obtain registration. On pltfs.' motion for an interim injunction, no order was made on deft. undertaking to sell his bats without any mark except his name & the address "Marylebone":—Held: the markings on the two bats were so distinct that it was impossible for an average man about to purchase a cricket bat to be deceived into thinking that deft.'s bat was pltfs.'; & the action was dismissed, but without costs, by reason of deft.'s wrongful user of the word "registered."—*WARSOP (B.) & SONS, LTD. v. An irregular footpath ran along the strip of waste, & for over forty years the public had walked over the strip of waste & footpath without restriction. For many years the lord had received small annual payments for the road trimmings, including the strip of waste, & for permitting the erection of telephone posts on the strip of waste. In an action by pltf., as lord of the manor, to restrain deft. council, the road authority, from converting the strip of waste into a public gravelled footway, deft. council pleaded that the strip of waste was part of the highway vested in them under Local Government Act, 1888 (c. 41):—Held: the above acts of ownership by the lord were insufficient to rebut the presumption that the strip of waste had been dedicated to the use of the public, & the action was dismissed. But it was dismissed without costs, inasmuch as deft. council had by their previous correspondence & acts admitted the title of pltf. & led him to believe that he had a good cause of action.—*EAST v. SUB-SECT. 4.—WHEN BOTH PARTIES AT FAULT.

1514. No costs given.—A landowner filed his bill & applied for an injunction to prevent a railway co. from prosecuting their works on his land, upon which they had entered without notice & without consent, & which lay without the limits of deviation. On the hearing of the motion, it was ordered to stand over for the decision of the Board of Trade. The Board of Trade decided in favour of the co. The ct. refused to give pltf. the costs of the motion.

The ct. can make an order as to the costs of a motion, although the motion may not have included any mention of costs.

Having regard to the two views—the one in favour of the co. from the decision of the Board of Trade, the other of pltf., by reason of no notice having been given of the deviation, . . . I ought simply to make an order referring to the previous order in this ct., & to the decision of the Board of Trade, but to give no costs on this motion (KINDERSLEY, V.C.).—PEARCE v. WYCOMBE RY. No notice had been given to the execution creditor, who, in the meantime, had admitted that the goods seized did not belong to B.:—Held: no costs of the motion could be given to either party, either below or on appeal, both having been wrong; O. because he ought not to have brought his action without waiting for the result of the interpleader summons, which must, therefore, protect the sheriff in the usual way, & the sheriff because, though not guilty of misconduct, he had in fact been a mere trespasser.—*HILLIARD v. I am quite satisfied that deft. has not intended to commit any impropriety. . . . Ought he under those circumstances to have been dragged into this ct. in this litigation? To some extent he has brought it on himself by . . . not taking a reasonable course. Therefore . . . I think the whole justice of the case will be met by deft. giving an undertaking not to repeat the act, & that there should be no costs on either side (MALINS, V.-C.).—ROSE v. LOFTUS (1878), 47 L. J. The judgment creditor had already received formal notice that the furniture was comprised in a marriage settlement, & a similar formal notice was given to the sheriff's officer on Aug. 22. On Aug. 23 the trustee of the marriage settlement issued the writ in this action in the Ch. Div., to which the sheriff only was made deft., claiming an injunction to restrain him from selling the furniture & damages for the entry & seizure. On the same day a judge in chambers granted, ex p., an injunction to restrain the sale until Aug. 26. On Aug. 25, the sheriff took out an interpleader summons. On Aug. 26, the vacation judge made an order in the Chancery action, that all further proceedings be stayed until the interpleader summons should be disposed of. The interpleader summons having resulted in the admission of the trustee's title by the judgment creditor, the motion for an interim injunction was reserved to be dealt with at the hearing:—Held: the sheriff ought to have applied to have the Chancery action disposed of together with the interpleader summons; but, the ct. being of opinion that the sheriff had in other respects properly discharged his duty, therefore no case for damages was made out, & the further prosecution of the action in the Ch. By consent the motion was treated as the trial of the action, & an inquiry as to damages was directed, & defts. gave an undertaking not to infringe extending during the life of the patent. 1530 Plaintiff refused costs—Abandonment of part of claim.—As a general rule, the costs of the cause should follow the result of the cause; but an exception will be made where a party has established his object by means of an unnecessary degree of litigation.

Pltfs. having filed a bill to restrain defts. from using certain trade marks, & for an account of the profits made by the sale of goods so marked, obtained an ex p. injunction. On the same day, pltfs. received a letter from defts.' solr., in which defts. stated, through their solr., that they had never used the marks since they were aware they were private property; & that they did not intend to use them again; & they offered to compensate pltfs. for any injury they might have sustained. Pltfs., however, prosecuted the cause to a hearing; & then, by their counsel, abandoned their title to the account, because it was so small as not to be worth taking. Deft. was not aware that the brand was spurious, nor, except from seeing it on the invoice, that any such brand was in use. Immediately upon pl'tfs. issuing their writ & serving deft. with notice of motion for an injunction to restrain him from selling the cigars, deft. stated that he had no intention of selling the cigars, & offered all the relief asked for by the writ, & afterwards at the motion agreed to an undertaking in the terms of the writ, the question of costs being reserved:—Held: deft. must pay all the costs of the action.

I hold it clear that it is not necessary in a case like the one before me to give notice. Pl'tfs. are clearly entitled to their costs (CHITTY, J.).—UPMANN v. FORESTER (1883), 24 Ch. D. 231; 52 L. J. Ch. 946; 49 L. T. 122; 47 J. P. 807; 32 W. R. 28.

1533. ——J. J. & S., distillers of whisky in Dublin, which they sold in casks to retailers, supplied their customers with two descriptions of labels, one for three-year-old whisky bearing their registered trade mark "J. J. & S.," the other bearing the trade mark & three stars, for use on bottles containing whisky at least seven years old. C., having purchased from them some of their three-year-old whisky, & having been supplied with a number of labels of the first kind, got imitations made of the second description of label, with the distinctive mark of three stars, affixed same on bottles not containing seven-year-old whisky, & sold it as the seven-year-old whisky. On being written to he stated that he had used the label merely for ornament, & denied that he had sold the whisky as seven-year-old whisky or committed any fraud, & promised not to use the label again. The solrs. for J. J. & S. replied, "You have committed a gross fraud; pl'tfs. will require you to pay £50; also £10 to Belfast General Hospital & £10 for costs; also to sign an apology to be published in two newspapers & to deliver up all the imitation labels in your possession." The solr. for C. wrote characterising the terms as extortionate, but offering to pay any costs incurred up to date & sign a letter of regret. J. H. & S. then commenced an action against C. Thereupon his solr. wrote on Oct. 11, 1901, to pl'tfs.' solrs. offering to sign a consent to an injunction & to pay pl'tfs.' solrs. costs properly & necessarily incurred. Pl'tfs. went on to trial, & proved that deft. had on two occasions sold the whisky as pl'tfs.' seven-year-old whisky. Deft.'s counsel, while not resisting the injunction, submitted that pl'tfs. were entitled only to the costs incurred prior to the date of the letter in which they offered to consent to & to pay the costs:—Held: deft. was not entitled to the exemption he asked for, & granted the injunction with costs.—JAMESON & SON, LTD. v. CLARKE (1902), 19 R. P. C. 255.

1534. — Defendant's offer not fulfilled.—Upon the invasion of a patent right, the party complaining has a right to the protection of an injunction, although the other party may promise to commit no further infringement, & may offer to pay the costs of preparing the bill; & if deft. do not, after injunction obtained, offer to pay the costs of it, pl'tf. may bring the suit to a hearing, & will be entitled to the costs of the suit.—*GEARY v. 1535. — Motion not unnecessary.—On June 12, 1886, one of defts.' travellers received an order from N., of Lavender Hill, for sixty dozen cardboard boxes, with labels bearing the words "Browne's Satin Polish for ladies' & children's boots & shoes, travelling bags, trunks, etc., manufactured by Browne, of Lavender Hill." On July 6, 1886, pl'tf., the owner of a registered trade mark, 14,127, bearing the words "Brown's Satin Polish," issued a writ to restrain the infringement of his trade mark. On July 7, 1886, defts. offered to compensate pl'tf. without the necessity of legal proceedings, & to destroy the labels, & comply with any reasonable request of pl'tf. On July 16, pl'tf. moved for an injunction:—Held: notwithstanding defts.' offer, the motion was not an unnecessary proceeding, & defts. must pay the costs caused by what they had done.—FENNESSY v. DAY & MARTIN (1886), 55 L. T. 161.

1536. — Conditional offer.—In an action for infringement of a trade mark & for passing off, defts., by letter, offered to consent to a perpetual injunction with other relief, & to pay pl'tfs.' taxed costs, upon the terms that the judgment should not be advertised, or that it should contain a statement that defts. submitted to the judgment for the sake of peace. Pl'tfs. refused to agree to the condition attached to the offer, & defts. put in a defence in which they pleaded this offer. At the trial of the action defts. asked that the costs from the date of the offer should be ordered to be paid by pl'tfs.:—Held: pl'tfs. were not bound to accept the condition, & an injunction was granted with other relief, & defts. were ordered to pay the costs of the action.—HENRY CLAY & BOCK & CO., LTD. v. GODFREY PHILLIPS, LTD. (1910), 27 R. P. C. 508.

1537. Plaintiff disallowed or liable for part costs —Costs after offer made.—Where deft., having rendered himself liable to be sued, & being sued, offers to submit to all the relief to which pltf. is entitled, the ct. will not give pltf. his costs of the subsequent prosecution of the suit.—COLBURN v. SIMMS (1843), 2 Hare, 543; 12 L. J. Ch. 388; 1 L. T. O. S. 75; 7 Jur. 1104; 67 E. R. 224.

1539. ———.]—The D. co. & the M. co. employed the same solrs. & the same contractors in the purchase of lands from K. & the prosecution of their works thereon. The M. co. were not to enter on their purchase till they had paid their purchase-money. The solrs. acting for the D. co. gave the contractors instructions to enter upon the land purchased by that co. & commence their works. The contractors did so, but by mistake they also entered on the land purchased, but not paid for, by the M. co., & although afterwards told by the solrs. of the M. co. to give up possession, they refused to do so, & in fact stayed in possession for three months, when the purchase-money was paid. In the meantime K. & W., his under tenant of the land sold to the M. co., had instituted injunction suits against that co. The co. offered to compromise the suits on each party paying their own costs. Those terms K. & W. refused, but did not suggest that the M. co. ought to pay all the costs of the suits:—Held: defts., the M. co., must pay all the costs of the suits up to the offer to compromise; but there must be no order as to the costs after that time.—KENSINGTON (LORD) v. METROPOLITAN RY. CO., WILLIAMS v. METROPOLITAN RY. CO. (1866), 14 L. T. 580; 14 W. R. 754.

1540. ———.]—Pltfs. sued to restrain infringement of an important literary newspaper article & three trivial news paragraphs. Defts. offered an undertaking with costs not to publish again the first article, refusing to undertake as to the others. Pltfs. proceeded with the action; they were disallowed costs subsequent to defts.' offer.

Where an action is brought to enforce a legal right, such as an action to restrain the infringement of a very small part of pltf.'s copyright, the ct. will not, as a matter of course, order deft. to pay the costs of the action.—WALTER v. Defendant liable for costs of suit—Cause brought to hearing—After interlocutory injunction granted.]—Where pltf. is entitled to have the injunction made perpetual, deft. will have to pay the costs of the suit, however trivial the subject matter of the suit may be, if he did not, after the injunction was granted, tender the costs up to that time.—FRADELLA v. The suit was continued to a hearing, & the account of profits, which were very trifling, was waived:—Held: deft. must pay the whole costs of suit. Semble: if deft. had offered to pay the costs up to the time when the proposal was made to submit to a perpetual injunction, the subsequent costs would have been thrown on pltf.—BURGESS v. Pltf., therefore, under such circumstances, is entitled to the costs of the suit, including the answer, as between party & party; & if by the refusal of deft. to pay those costs, pltf. is compelled to bring his cause to a hearing, he will be entitled to the whole costs of the suit, as between

SECT. 3.—INTERLOCUTORY APPLICATION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1552. Costs costs in cause.]—Pltf. was a young lady who had been a ward of ct.; & eighteen months after coming of age, while continuing to reside with her guardian, she had indorsed a promissory note, drawn by her guardian in her favour. The note was given by the guardian to certain creditors in part payment of a debt, & was by them presented to their bankers & discounted. It appeared that the bankers knew the relative position of pltf. & her guardian, & also knew that the guardian had been in embarrassed circumstances previous to the note being presented:—Held: it was the duty of the bankers to have investigated the transaction, & an injunction was granted to restrain them from taking proceedings at law upon the note.

As in all matters of injunction which are to protect parties or to protect property until the cause is heard, I think it is right that the costs of this application should be costs in the cause (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—MAITLAND v. BACKHOUSE (1848), 16 Sim. 58; 17 L. J. Ch. 121; 11 L. T. O. S. 237; 12 Jur. 45; 60 E. R. 794, L. C.

1553. ———.]—A bill was filed to restrain the infringement of a patent, & an injunction was obtained upon motion. defts. appearing & opposing & pltf's. undertaking to bring an action to try their right at law. Pltf's., failing to establish their right at law, the bill was ultimately dismissed with costs for want of prosecution:—Held: defts. were entitled to their costs of resisting the motion for an injunction as costs in the cause.—STEVENS v. KEATING (1850), 1 Mac. & G. 659; 2 H. & Tw. 176; 19 L. J. Ch. 407; 14 Jur. 157; 41 E. R. 1420, L. C.

1554. ———.]—(1) The Act of Parliament, constituting a railway co., directed that the railway, branch railways & works should be completed to the satisfaction of the engineer of a broad gauge railway co., & should be of such gauge & construction as would admit of the railway to be constructed being worked continuously with the broad gauge railway; & after reciting that the railway to be constructed was intended to be connected with two narrow gauge railways at specified junctions, the Act directed that, along the portions of the railway north of a specified point on their line, additional rails should be laid down, so as to adapt the lines as well to the narrow as to the broad gauge there. The co. proceeded to form a line on the narrow-gauge for the whole length on the north of the specific point on their line, as also on a part of the line south of that point, with earth work & timber work, so as to admit of the broad gauge rails being added, & of the railway being a mixed gauge line throughout, with double rails to the north of the specified point. The broad gauge co. were entitled to shares in the mixed gauge railway co.; & in a suit by the broad gauge co. suing on behalf of themselves & the other shareholders, against the directors of the mixed gauge co., they asked for an injunction to restrain the construction of the railway otherwise than upon the broad gauge throughout its entire length, or otherwise to restrain the laying down the narrow gauge at all south of the specified point; also to restrain the laying down the narrow gauge north of the specified point, until the rails on the broad gauge had been laid throughout the line; & also to restrain the opening the railway on any part till the rails on the broad gauge had been laid down on the whole line:—Held: the ct. could not grant an injunction for any of such objects.

(2) The course of the ct. provides for the costs of motions for injunctions in a way most just, by leaving the party moving, if his suit fails, to pay the costs, & if his suit succeeds, providing for his costs effectually.

(3) Parties who have lain by & permitted a large expenditure to be made in contravention of the rights for which they contend, cannot call upon this ct. for its summary interference. The jurisdiction to interfere is purely equitable & must be governed by equitable principles. One of the first of these principles is that parties coming into equity must do equity (TURNER, L.J.).—GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. v. OXFORD, WORCESTER & WOLVERHAMPTON RY. CO. (1853), 3 De G. 1557. ———.]—On the occasion of the sale of a freehold estate it was agreed that the purchase money should be paid in railway bonds, & the purchaser deposited with & assigned to A., who alleged himself to be the solr. of the vendor, one of such bonds in part payment of the purchase-money. The contract turned out to be a fraud on the purchaser & went off, & on the purchaser applying to A., for the return of the deposited bond, he was informed that A. had placed it in the hands of B., to secure a debt due from himself to B., B. had no notice of the terms upon which A. held the bond:—Held: in a suit by the purchaser against B. to restrain him from dealing with the bond, that the deposit & assignment of the bond by the purchaser to A. for the purpose above-mentioned did not make A. in the events which happened, a constructive trustee for pltf., & as B. was a bond fide purchaser of the bond for value without notice, he could not be restrained from dealing with it. Where the allegation upon which the principal equity of the bill was founded was disproved by the evidence brought forward upon an interlocutory motion for an injunction, the ct. in refusing the motion ordered pltf. to pay the costs thereof instead of making them costs in the cause.—ASHWIN v. BURTON (1862), 32 L. J. Ch. 196; 7 L. T. 589; 9 Jur. N. S. 319; 11 W. R. 103.

SUB-SECT. 2.—MOTION ORDERED TO STAND OVER.

1563. Effect—Court reserves power to deal with costs.]—SINGER v. AUDSLEY, No. 1127, ante.

1564. ———.]—If the motion stands till the trial, it is not only unnecessary, but improper specially to reserve the costs. When the motion stands till the trial, the judge at the trial disposes of the motion including the costs. The practice is this :—where the parties agree that the question arising on the motion is the same as that at the trial, then the right course is to make the costs of the motion, costs in the action. Often, however, a different point arises on the motion from that involved in the action, such as the question whether it was right to make the motion at all, whatever the rights of the parties may be. In such a case the proper order is that the motion stands over until the trial (CHITTY, J.).—BOURNEMOUTH COMRS. v. HOLDEN, [1888] W. N. 205.

1565. ——— Where costs not mentioned—Costs in the cause.]—On a bill to restrain the infringement of a patent, a motion for injunction was ordered to stand over until after the trial of an action, nothing being said about costs. In the action pltf. succeeded on the issue as to the infringement, but failed in establishing the validity of his patent. The bill was afterwards dismissed with costs :—Held : deft.'s costs of the motion were costs in the cause.—BETTS v. CLIFFORD (1860), 1 John & H. 74; 3 L. T. 36; 70 E. R. 667.

When the suit came to a hearing, a decree was made for a perpetual injunction, & deft. was ordered to pay the costs of the suit; but the costs of the motion were not mentioned in the decree :—Held : (1) the motion was substantially a successful motion, & the costs of the motion were costs in the cause; (2) the amendment of the bill by which it was turned into an information & bill, did not affect the question.—*MOUNSEY v. On the trial judgment was given for deft., with costs; but nothing was said as to the costs of the motion, & the registrar, in drawing up the judgment, refused to include them :—Held : where a motion is adjourned or stands over to the trial, & no mention is made as to the costs of it then or at the trial, the judgment carries the costs of the motion.—*GOSNELL v. 1569. Where no order made—& motion stands over—Ultimately discharged—Costs reserved to hearing.]—A motion being made for an injunction, no order was made, & the motion stood over from time to time on an undertaking. A motion was then made to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, when defts. having professed to act bond fide, the undertaking was discharged & leave given to amend the bill within a fixed time, & defts. carried out their professed intentions. No costs were given on either side, & the costs of the motion for the injunction were treated as costs in the cause. A motion was now made, asking for the costs of the injunction as costs of an abandoned motion :—Held : the consideration of the costs of the motion for the injunction must be reserved until the hearing, & there must be no costs of the application on either side.—FELKIN v. LEWIS (1863), 8 L. T. 788; 11 W. R. 981.

1570. Action dismissed with costs—No order as to costs of motion.]—In an action for an injunction to restrain infringement of pltf.'s trade marks & passing off by defts. of their goods under a name only colourably differing from that under which the goods of pltf. were sold, pltf. had moved for an interim injunction until after judgment or further order in terms of the indorsement on the writ of summons. No order was made for an injunction, but an order was made for speedy trial, the parties were put under terms as to delivery of pleadings, & the costs of the motion were specially reserved. As the evidence stood on the motion, the learned judge would have felt himself bound to make the order asked for. At the trial the action was dismissed, & pltf. contended that defts. ought not to get costs:—Held: the proper order to make at the trial was that which would have been made if an order for an injunction had gone on the motion, viz., no order as to the costs of the motion, but that the action be dismissed with costs. Leave to pltf. to appeal on the question of costs was refused.—COOMBE v. MENDIT, LTD. (1913), 136 L. T. Jo. 86.

SUB-SECT. 3.—WHEN MOTION REFUSED.

1571. Costs reserved to hearing of cause—Whether costs in the cause.]—Injunction decreed to restrain a solr. from communicating to a party who was suing a former client documents or matters of evidence which had come to the possession or knowledge of the solr. in respect of his employment for such client, & to restrain the party suing from using in his action, or otherwise, any documents or matters of evidence which he had so obtained.

On a motion for an injunction being refused, the costs were reserved to the hearing of the cause; & at the hearing the injunction was decreed, & deft. was ordered to pay to pltf. the costs so reserved, as well as the general costs of the suit relating to the injunction. But, on appeal, this course of proceeding was disapproved by the Lord Chancellor, & the decree was altered by striking out the order for payment of the reserved costs.

The rule which forbids an appeal on the question of costs alone does not preclude the ct., where the appeal embraces other matters also, from varying the decree as to costs, though it affirm it as to such other matters; but such variations will not protect applt. from the costs of the appeal.—LEWIS v. SMITH (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 417; 12 L. T. O. S. 141; 41 E. R. 1326, L. C.

PART XIV. SECT. 4.

1574 i. Injunction discharged—Costs of original motion—Defendant entitled to.]—Where the result of a motion for an interlocutory injunction depended upon a question of law & not of fact, & the motion was reheard at the instance of deft., against whom an injunction had been ordered, the ct., on reversing such order, gave deft. the costs of the motion as well as of the rehearing.—FIRE EXTINGUISHER CO. v. NORTH WESTERN (BABCOCK) FIRE EXTINGUISHER CO. (1873), 20 Gr. 625.—CAN.

1574 ii. ———.]—A suit was brought for an injunction & other relief & application was made for an interlocutory injunction. Deft. opposed the motion, which was refused, with costs.

On appeal the motion was allowed. At the hearing of the suit a decree was made in pltf.'s favour. On appeal the decree was reversed, the bill was dismissed with costs, & the injunction order dissolved:—Held: deft. was entitled to the costs of opposing the interlocutory application as costs in the cause.—NEW BRUNSWICK RY. CO. & BROWN v. KELLY (1895), 1 N. B. Eq. Rep. 156.—CAN.

p. Appeal instead of motion.]—Deft., in a suit on the equity side of the county ct., had, before being served with an injunction restraining the removal of a building, removed the same by direction of the city inspector as being a nuisance, having been erected partly on the public street: notwith-

SECT. 4.—ON APPEAL AGAINST INJUNCTION.

1573. Failure by plaintiff to fulfil undertaking.]—Where, pending an appeal motion from an order dissolving an injunction, the cause was heard in the ct. below, when the injunction so dissolved had been revived in a modified form, upon the hearing of the appeal motion, no costs, which then formed the only question, were given to either side on the appeal; but pltf., the applt., having, by the non-performance of an undertaking he had given in the ct. below, when the injunction was granted, rendered an application to the ct. necessary:—Held: he was properly ordered to pay the costs of the motion for dissolving the injunction.

A motion having been made before the Vice-Chancellor to dissolve an injunction which restrained deft. from receiving his pension, that motion was granted upon an undertaking by pltf. to do certain things prescribed to him. Pltf. failed to do those things, & a second motion became necessary, & the injunction was then dissolved. I cannot say that the second motion was an improper one; & the costs of it must be paid by pltf. By the decree subsequently made in the cause, the injunction thus dissolved has been revived, & is now standing. There are, therefore, circumstances in this motion which prevent me from giving the costs of the appeal against the order made on the motion. There will be no costs on either side on the appeal (LORD LYNTHURST, C.).—HALL v. LACK (1846), 7 L. T. O. S. 77.

1574. Injunction discharged—Costs of original motion—Defendant entitled to.]—Where an order for an injunction was discharged upon an appeal, defts. were held entitled to the costs of the original motion.—BEARDMER v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. CO. (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 112; 5 Ry. & Can. Cas. 728; 1 H. & Tw. 161; 18 L. J. Ch. 432; 13 Jur. 327; 47 E. R. 1367, L. C.

1575. — As to one co-plaintiff—Additional costs of joinder as such.]—Two persons, who respectively resided on opposite sides of defts.' cement works, joined in filing a bill to restrain defts. from carrying on the works, on the ground of nuisance. The Vice-Chancellor granted an injunction, & defts. appealed:—Held: as to one pltf. the appeal must be dismissed, but as to the

this, an order was made by the judge of the county ct. for the committal of deft., who, without moving to dissolve the injunction on the facts, appealed to this ct. In allowing the appeal, & directing deft.'s discharge, the ct. did not give him the costs of the application.—MURPHY v. MORRISON (1868), 14 Gr. 203.—CAN.

q. Rehearing.]—The decree in a cause gave pltf. the general costs thereof:—Held: this did not carry the costs of rehearing an interlocutory order made refusing an injunction, which order was reversed on rehearing; the practice requiring that, where costs of rehearing are intended to be given they must be expressly mentioned in the order giving the costs of the other pltf. it must be allowed, & the latter pltf. must pay any additional costs of the suit caused by his having been joined as co-pltf.—UMFREVILLE v. JOHNSON (1875), 10 Ch. App. 580; 44 L. J. Ch. 752; 23 W. R. 844, L. JJ.

1577. Bankruptcy of defendant—Trustee adopting bankrupt's defence.—An interlocutory order for an injunction & receiver having been made against defts. in an action, they gave notice of appeal, & shortly afterwards became bkpt. An order was made for carrying on the proceedings against their trustee. The trustee gave notice to pltf. that he should not proceed with the appeal. Shortly after this the trustee entered an appearance & called for a statement of claim. He declined to undertake to pay the costs of the appeal incurred by pltf. before the notice that the appeal would not be proceeded with, & the appeal came on that the question as to the costs might be decided:—Held: the appeal must be dismissed with costs to be paid by the trustee, for that having adopted the defence of the bkpts. he had placed himself in their position as to the whole of the action, & could not reject part of the proceedings in it.—BORNEMAN v. WILSON (1884), 28 Ch. D. 53; 54 L. J. Ch. 631; 51 L. T. 728; 33 W. R. 141; 1 T. L. R. 64, C. A.

PART XIV. SECT. 5.

t. Taxation on High Court scale—Claim for damages & injunction.—In an action brought in the High Ct. to restrain defts. by injunction from negotiating a promissory note for $230,

& to compel them to deliver it up to pltf., or for damages for its detention, it was determined that the note was wrongfully held by defts., who had obtained it under the pretence of discounting it, but really with the view of making it the subject of garnishment:—Held: the action sounded in tort & not in contract, & could not have been brought in a county ct.; & the successful pltf. was therefore entitled to tax his costs on the High Ct. scale.—PLUMMER v. COLDWELL (1892), 15 P. R. 144.—CAN.

a. No order as to costs—Plaintiff's bill subsequently dismissed.—Upon a motion to continue an injunction, which was refused, no order was made as to costs. Afterwards pltf.'s bill was dismissed with costs:—Held: the costs of the motion were taxable, as costs in the 1581. — Infringement of trade mark.—Pltfs. had for many years carried on the business of steel manufacturers under the name of T. T. & Sons. Deft., J. T., had for many years carried on a similar business in the same town, at first as J. T., then as J. T. & Co. In 1888 he took his two sons into partnership & carried on the same business as J. T. & Sons. There was no evidence that defts. imitated the trade marks or labels of pltfs. or otherwise attempted to deceive the public:—Held: although there was a probability that the public would be occasionally misled by the similarity of the names, pltfs. were not entitled to an injunction restraining defts. from the use of the name J. T. & Sons. Pltfs. were ordered to pay the costs of the action on the higher scale.—TURTON v. TURTON (1889), 42 Ch. D. 128; 58 L. J. Ch. 677; 61 L. T. 571; 54 J. P. 151; 38 W. R. 22; 5 T. L. 1582. Taxation on High Court scale—Claim for damages & injunction—Ten pounds recovered as damages—Injunction waived.—In this action pltf. claimed damages for breach of a covenant contained in a lease not to make any alteration in the demised premises, & also an injunction restraining the breach. During the progress of the action deft. restored the premises to their former condition. At the trial pltf. recovered £10 damages with costs to be taxed, but did not ask for an injunction as deft. stated that he did not intend to interfere again with the premises:—Held: County Courts Act, 1888 (c. 43), s. 116, did not apply, & pltf. was entitled to costs upon the High Ct. scale.—DOHERTY v.
